USDA preparing to unveil collaborative food safety certification initiative for small farms

By Amy H. Carter

The U.S. Department of Agriculture is preparing to expand a food safety certification program designed to help small and mid-sized farmers broaden the marketability of their commodities. GroupGAP is a collaborative verification initiative that has been tested on a small scale for the last three years in coordination with the Wallace Center, a national nonprofit concerned with increasing food availability and sustainable agriculture worldwide.

GroupGAP will be made widely available in April 2016.

Edward Avalos, undersecretary for marketing and regulatory programs at the USDA, called food safety “a real challenge” for small growers who lack the economic and technical resources to obtain third-party verification of on-farm food safety processes. Although the emphasis on consuming local and regional foods is still growing in popularity, small local and regional farms are finding it increasingly harder to sell to major retailers and restaurants that require proof of their compliance with USDA’s Good Agricultural Practices (GAP) and Good Handling Practices (GHP) rules.

By allowing small-to-mid-sized producers to collaborate on procedures and share in the cost of third-party verification, USDA is working to create a more level playing field that will allow family farmers to capitalize on society’s growing desire to eat fresh and shop local.

“Local and regional isn’t going away,” Avalos said. “At USDA, we are going to continue to support local and regional.”

Ken Peterson, chief of the audits branch for specialty crops inspection at USDA, said GroupGAP will work for any sized farm, from the half-acre vegetable patch to the 20,000 acre potato or leafy greens operation. However, it’s tailored specifically for the smaller farms that typically do not have the financial or technical resources to maintain food safety staff and hire an outside auditor to verify their compliance with GAP and GHP.

“USDA is responding to local growers who want to get hooked into that national market,” said Ken Keck, director of the USDA’s transportation and marketing programs.

In addition to facilitating collaboration among farms, the USDA will encourage GroupGAP participation by allowing the use of specialty crop block grant funds to reimburse producers for their food safety certification expenses, Keck said.

Jeff Stoltzfus, adult agriculture educator in the Eastern Lancaster County School District in Lancaster, Pa., coordinated the pilot program to test GroupGAP on the small family farms – largely Amish – in that community.

“GroupGAP brings economies of scale to small family farms,” Stoltzfus said.

Take, for example, the Pennsylvania sweet onions grown in his region. One farmer growing 130 acres of onions will pay between $1,000 and $2,000 for a third-party audit to satisfy the food safety requirements of a mainstream buyer. The more likely scenario, however, is that 130 acres of onion fields are spread among the farms of 80 small growers. Those 80 farmers individually would pay about $500 each for the same audit that the big producer contracted, and they’ll end up spending $40,000 to verify that their onions were cultivated, harvested and packed properly.

Matt Rogers, senior global produce buyer for the Whole Foods Market grocery chain, said the chain owes its growth to small, regional producers. As the Whole Foods brand has expanded and food safety has become a larger priority, the chain has found it easier to deal with large suppliers who can afford the audits that verify proper food safety procedures on the farm.

Rogers said GroupGAP will make it easier for the chain to return to its small regional producers to supply the fresh foods it sells.

“We will support it,” he said.

Future Farmers of America?

John David Powell, 6, and his brother Matthew, 4, pick cotton from a bale freshly harvested off the 600-acre research farm at the Sunbelt Agricultural Exposition Oct. 21. The sons of Rex and Amy Powell of Douglasville, who both grew up on farms, were in Moultrie for the day to see what agriculture is all about. The Expo hosted 1,200 exhibitors and 300 seminars and demonstrations on its 100-acre show site at Spence Field, a former training base for Army Air Force pilots during World War II and the Korean War. The base was decommissioned in 1961, and hosted the first Sunbelt Ag Expo in 1978. The 2016 expo is scheduled for Oct. 18-20. Learn more at sunbeltexpo.com.

GEORGIA GROWN PROFILE: Southern Beverage quenches the thirst of health-conscious consumers

By Emani Odumosu

Bottled beverages are quick, refreshing and easy to access in a bind; however, most products can be unhealthy and sometimes expensive. A Georgia based company seeks to lead the pack in changing the status quo of the beverage industry.

Southern Beverage is a diversified beverage company that specializes in bottled water.

Established in the 1940s as the 7UP bottling company of Augusta, the company eventually moved on to making private label soft drinks for Winn-Dixie, Kroger and Piggly Wiggly.

The Southern Beverage of today was established in 1967 when Joe Byrd bought the facility from its original owners. His son David Byrd is now running the show as president.

In the 1980s, David suggested to his father the idea of packaging inexpensive bottled water back when it was a rare luxury. That is when Springtime water was born.

“Water and energy is where the beverage growth is. Everybody is into health today and we’re promoting that,” said David Byrd. “We are developing good-for-you items and will continue to do that in the future.”

The company is now based in Appling and draws its water from several Artesian wells on the property. In addition to Springtime Artesian water, Sparkling Water and Vitamin Enhanced Water, Southern Beverage offers multi-flavor soft drinks under the brand name Crystalline.

The company joined Georgia Grown because of the support the program offers to small businesses. Over everything else, they are proud to represent the Georgia ag industry.

“The Department of Agriculture has done a fabulous job promoting Georgia Grown,” said David Byrd. “Everywhere I go I let everybody know that we are a part of Georgia Grown. They know that it is a successful program and look for Georgia Grown items.”

Many beverage options are available to the public and sales are competitive. Some consumers stick to better-known brands in the industry but Southern Beverage proves that it can run with the big dogs.

“We feel like [our product] is pretty good,” said Angie Byrd, marketing director and wife of David Byrd. “The first thing we always do is look at our customer and give them the best product we can. There are a lot of competitors out there and it keeps growing. We’re a small family owned business and we are still around. For me that says something.”

Springtime and Crystalline products can be found at Kroger, Sam’s and other locations across 12 states in the Southeast.

James Lyles of Ringgold is Georgia's Farmer of the Year

James Lyles dreams of one day leaving his Ringgold farm to his children, and for the most part, 10-year-old Chloe Lyles seems good with that plan – as long as she doesn't have to milk cows.

Roaming the dairy barn at the Sunbelt Ag Expo Oct. 20 ahead of a milking contest between Georgia Agriculture Commissioner Gary W. Black (who won) and Mississippi Agriculture Commissioner Cindy Hyde-Smith, Chloe said she'd been there and done that and it took much too long for her taste.

"I kept thinking, 'When will this be over?'" she said while nibbling on an ice cream sandwich.

Fortunately for Chloe, dairy is one of the few agribusinesses her dad isn't dabbling in these days on his 627-acre Dry Creek Farm. What he is doing, though, he's doing well enough to have earned recognition as the 2015 Georgia Farmer of the Year in a contest sponsored by Swisher Sweets of Jacksonville, Fla., in partnership with the Sunbelt Ag Expo in Moultrie.

"This is an awesome experience," Lyles said after leaving the stage at the expo.

Lyles was one of 10 farmers in the running to be named Southeastern Farmer of the Year. State winners competing alongside him hailed from Virginia, Tennessee, North and Tara and James Lyles and their children, Chloe and Ethan, on the family farm in Ringgold, Ga.

South Carolina, Mississippi, Kentucky, Florida, Arkansas and Alabama. Danny Kornegay of North Carolina received the award.

Lyles was nominated by Catoosa County Extension Agent Charles J. Lancaster.

"James is expanding his operation and is one of the very few full-time farmers in Catoosa County," Lancaster said.

Lyles, 38, started farming 19 years ago with 180 acres. He learned the business on the dairy farm owned by his grandparents, James and Joyce Ramey. After Lyles was grown his grandfather closed the dairy operation and began focusing on broiler chickens. Before he died, Ramey offered Lyles a partnership in the operation.

"I was smart enough to jump on that offer," Lyles said. "Then, when 407 acres of adjoining land became available to purchase, my grandparents helped me buy it by putting up their 90-acre farm as part of the collateral."

Steadily expanding both the farm and its various commodities, Lyles grows Bermuda and mixed grass hay (producing 17,000 square bales this year), operates seven broiler chicken houses, tends a herd of about 150 beef cattle and grows pine trees.

"It keeps me a little busy," Lyles said.

So busy, in fact, that wife Tara retired from her career teaching elementary school to lend a hand and to oversee the paperwork and business affairs on the farm. She also home-schools Chloe and her little brother, Ethan, 8, who also help out on the farm along with Tara Lyles's father and a family friend.

Swisher International, through its Swisher Sweets cigar brand, and the Sunbelt Ag Expo have sponsored the Southeastern Farmer of the Year awards for 26 years. Swisher has contributed more than $1 million in cash awards and honors to Southeastern farmers since the award was created in 1990.

Through bad times and good, Dee Ridley cultivates blessings where she finds them

While some farmers might argue that a living made off the earth will make you old before your time, Dee Ridley of Gainesville would say otherwise. At 99, Miss Dee Ridley is a cultivator on a small but persistent scale.

In fact, she says the secret to a healthy life is eating fresh vegetables from the garden and "a little salt."

Growing up on her family's farm, Miss Dee learned to stretch their bounty through the worst of hard times, the Great Depression. She also cultivated a "Victory Garden" during World War II, a practice encouraged by the government in a time of widespread shortage.

So expert is she on matters of surviving and thriving that the Hall County Master Gardeners enlisted Miss Dee's help three years ago in planting their own Victory Garden, according to an article in The Gainesville Times. She told them that an authentic Victory Garden would have onions, potatoes and beans, tomatoes, carrots and turnip greens.

Miss Dee is still gardening even as she prepares to celebrate her 100th birthday. She'll be moving to Colorado soon with her daughter, Joye Fuller, but not before she's harvested her tomatoes and peppers and attended a "pre-100th birthday" celebration with friends and family in Gainesville Nov. 19. It will be a celebration of a life well-lived by a woman who takes life as it comes, whether it's economic loss, war, or just a wayward pumpkin.

Returning home from an outing one day in August, Miss Dee spied something odd among the branches of her camellia bush. She saw two albino pumpkins growing off a vine that ran from its designated sunny spot in search of, oddly enough, some shade. Miss Dee let them grow to a September harvest. Each pumpkin weighed in at just under 10 pounds, Joye Fuller said.

"Mother has been so happy with the results and she is excited to show them off to all who stop by," Fuller said.

Happy Birthday from the Farmers and Consumers Market Bulletin, Miss Dee, and thank you for the inspiration to rejoice in all of life's blessings, big and small.

Arty's Garden: A Festival of Fall Flowers

By Arty Schronce

For many plants, fall is not the end but the beginning or the highlight of the year. Georgia autumns can be long, wonderful and full of flowers. Here are a few of my fall favorites.

Arty Schronce is the department's resident gardening expert. Chrysanthemums are another fall favorite of his, but he had so many photos he couldn't decide on just one. He can be reached at arty.schronce@agr.georgia.gov or by writing the Market Bulletin office.

Butterfly ginger, also known as hardy ginger, delivers a delicious fragrance and tropical flair to the fall garden. It also brings bright white flowers that stand out from the yellows, golds, purples and oranges that are predominant in the fall.

Fall-blooming crocuses are not well-known, but many of them perform better in Georgia than their spring-blooming counterparts. One that thrives in my garden is the straw-colored crocus (Crocus ochroleucus). It is better known by its botanical name than its common one.

Pineapple sage doesn't even think of blooming for me until October. It continues until frost. It is not reliably hardy for me and can be killed by cold weather.

Turk's cap mallow (Malvaviscus arboreus var. drummondii) is also known as wax mallow and by other colorful names. It is a sprawling member of the hibiscus family that lights up the cool fall days with its Chinese red flowers that serve as beacons for late-season hummingbirds and cloudless sulphur butterflies. It combines wonderfully with the cool blue of anise-scented salvia.

Native aster species produce a spectacular show, are drought tolerant and attract all manner of butterflies. This is one of many forms of New England aster. (Despite the name it is also native to Georgia.)

Blue mist flower is a Georgia native that is also known as hardy ageratum. It can be an aggressive spreader but is easy to pull up if it gets out of hand. It blooms in September and October and is a favorite of monarch butterflies.

Gardeners should expand camellia season by planting fall-blooming sasanqua camellias. This variety is "Apple Blossom," a name that calls spring to mind when it blooms in late October.

Home Cooking: Very Spicy Pumpkin Seeds

Wondering what to do with the leftover pumpkins from your fall décor displays? Try this recipe from the Market Bulletin archives. It comes with a note from our Test Kitchen to remove seeds from a fresh, unblemished pumpkin.

Preparing the Pumpkin Seeds

Preheat oven to 250 degrees F.

Remove the seeds from two medium pumpkins. Separate seeds from flesh and thoroughly wash the seeds.

Set pumpkin aside for later use.

With paper towel, blot the pumpkin seeds until dry and place them on a cookie sheet lined with parchment paper. Spread the seeds evenly.

Dry the seeds at 250 degrees F for 45-60 minutes. Carefully bake the seeds; they should be toasted but not overly brown.

Remove from oven and allow to cool.

Yield: Up to one cup of pumpkin seeds.

All recipes have been tested for accuracy in our Georgia Grown Test Kitchen unless otherwise noted. For more recipes and to watch cooking in action, find our "Pick, Cook, Keep" series at www.gpb.org/pick-cook-keep/

THE WORST TIME FOR HORSES: Neglect and abuse on the rise, good homes at a minimum for equine seized by the state

By Amy H. Carter

Would it surprise you to know that buying a homeless horse can cost less than adopting a stray dog or cat from the pound?

The price of horses is low nowadays in part because the population is so high. America's horse population tops out at 10 million, according to Patty Livingston, president of the Georgia Equine Rescue League, which promotes low-cost castration programs in an effort to control the horse population. Population control in horses, however, is not nearly as popular a concept as the spaying and neutering of dogs and cats, and dreams of high stud fees prompt many horse owners to shun the idea.

"There are more horses in our country than anywhere in the world," Livingston said. "People on welfare own horses in our country."

What many owners do not foresee is the expense of properly caring for and feeding a horse. As a result, complaints of abuse and neglect are high.

"We get about 1,000 new cases a year," said MAT Thompson, manager of the Equine Health Section of the Georgia Department of Agriculture's Animal Industry Division, Patty Livingston is president of the Georgia Equine Rescue League. She and a loyal band of volunteers work on many fronts to support the state's efforts to protect horses from abuse and neglect.

which employs 17 inspectors who respond to complaints of mistreatment and abuse statewide.

Individual counties are tasked with prosecution of animal cruelty cases – including those involving horses – and more counties statewide are pursuing cases against negligent and abusive owners, Livingston and Thompson said. However, with so many horses in need of rehabilitation and proper care and relatively few individuals or rescue organizations willing or able to take them in, the state is sometimes saddled with the task.

Several times each year, the department hosts an equine auction at its Mansfield Impound Barn to sell horses surrendered by or taken from negligent or abusive owners. Recently, however, the number of bidders willing to provide good homes to rescued horses has begun to dwindle.

"If we get 15 bidders, that's pretty good," Thompson said. "The auctions used to be bigger."

On Oct. 17, three bidders registered to purchase 10 miniature horses surrendered by a single owner. The highest price paid was $60, but the average was $25 given by bidders who bought more than they had come for out of sympathy for the animals.

A young volunteer leads a miniature horse around the auction ring Oct. 17. The horse was one of 10 surrendered by a single farmer in response to a complaint about neglect.

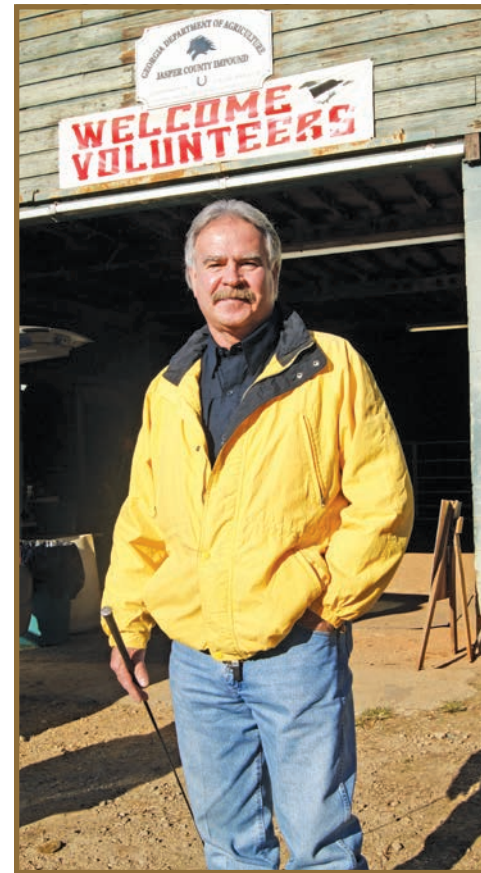

Auctioneer Mickey Farmer, who donates his time to conduct each auction, worked the crowd from the bed of a pick-up truck backed under the barn. He capitalized on the small stature of the horses to coax each sale out of the crowd.

"He'll fit in your car. He'll even drive," he exclaimed of Luke, the four-year-old gelding that fetched the highest price of the day.

Georgia's equine protection program originated with the Humane Care for Equines Act enacted by the General Assembly in 1992. The law makes it a misdemeanor to deprive a horse of adequate food, water, shelter and veterinary services, and authorizes the Department of Agriculture to impound, rehabilitate and sell horses whose owners cannot or will not comply.

The department maintains two impound farms, one in Decatur that is currently inactive, and one in Mansfield, where regular auctions are held. The department also places abused horses at Pulaski State Prison in Hawkinsville and Lee Arrendale State Prison in Alto, where female inmates enrolled in job training programs learn to perform rehabilitative therapy on the horses and train them to accept riders.

Twelve horses rehabilitated by inmates at the Pulaski State Prison will be auctioned at the Mansfield Barn Nov. 14. The horses will be shown at auction by the women who nursed them back to health.

MAT Thompson is manager of the Equine Health Section of the Georgia Department of Agriculture's Animal Industry Division. He's fighting a marked decline in bidders willing to buy impounded horses at state-sponsored auctions.

The Georgia Department of Agriculture will conduct a live equine auction for the following horses at 11 a.m. Saturday, Nov. 14, at its Impound Barn, 2834 Marben Farm Road, Mansfield. These horses will be available for inspection one hour before the auction:

Coco: 1 ½ y/o bay grade filly
Justice: 2 y/o bay grade gelding
Addie: 12 y/o sorrel Appaloosa grade mare; rides
Mike: 1 ½ y/o bay grade gelding
Buster: 6 y/o dun grade gelding
Babe: 2 y/o grey roan grade mare; rides
Dolores: 6 y/o palomino grade mare; rides
Lucius: 12 y/o red roan grade gelding; rides
Bellatrix: 12 y/o palomino grade mare; rides
Venus: 5 y/o sorrel & white grade mare; rides
Pate: 20 y/o old sorrel TB grade gelding; rides
Ellis: 4 y/o bay grade gelding

Livingston and a corps of dedicated GERL volunteers lend a hand at each auction and sell coffee, baked goods and horse tack and supplies to raise funds for rescue efforts. GERL has donated nearly $500,000 to the state's equine program since its inception, funding everything from feed to vaccinations for impounded horses.

In addition to donations, Livingston is hopeful that more rescue organizations and individuals will step up to provide good homes to abused and neglected horses, and that more owners will heed the call to sterilize their animals and help reduce the horse population not just in Georgia, but nationwide.

"This is the worst time in the world for horses," Livingston said. "This can't just be about rescue anymore."

Cows and horses and chickens, oh my!

Those are just three of the commodities that make agriculture Georgia's No. 1 industry, and they're also three of the cards in the deck of Go Farm!, a fun new educational game for kids developed by the Georgia Department of Agriculture's Georgia Grown Marketing Division. A riff on that old childhood favorite – Go Fish! – the Go Farm! deck is stacked with several of the top farm commodities that contribute $72 billion a year to the state's fiscal bottom line. Cotton, nuts, fruits and vegetables, dairy, eggs and timber are in the cards, also, along with a whole lot of barnyard-style fun. Email Misty Friedman, Feed-My-School coordinator for the Georgia Department of Agriculture, to order your deck today: misty.friedman@agr.georgia.gov.
