100 YEARS AGO TODAY:

A snapshot of farm life in Georgia when the Market Bulletin began

By Sharon Dowdy

In 1917, Georgia farmers were being affected by things out of their control, namely World War I and a tiny pest called the boll weevil that was just beginning its destructive path through cotton fields.

The majority of farmers in 1917 worked the land with the help of a mule, a trusty draft animal that could withstand Georgia's hot summers and, in some parts, rough terrain. A small farm relied on one mule to work about 10 acres of cotton. According to the 1910 U.S. Census of Agriculture, just shy of 16,000 mules (valued at an average of $170 each) were at work across the state. Sixty-four percent of farmers owned mules, while just 30 percent owned horses.

The average value of a farm, including equipment, was $1,995. This was a 95 percent increase from 1900 numbers.

The average value of farm land was $13.74 per acre, but farms in 10 North Georgia counties were valued between $25 and $50 per acre. Seventy-one percent of Georgia acreage was devoted to farming. The average farm consisted of 92.6 acres.

Cotton was king with 4.9 million acres devoted to the crop at a value of $127 million, but the boll weevil would soon knock it off its throne. The boll weevil first appeared in Thomsville in 1915, and cotton production began declining rapidly. By 1917, every cotton-producing county in Georgia reported the boll weevil, and production was down by 30 percent.

Many stories are recorded from people who grew up on farms in Georgia who collected the weevils for one penny each. Agricultural scientists at the Georgia Experiment Station in Griffin conducted research to help farmers fight the boll weevil. One UGA publication recommended "starving" the boll weevil by destroying cotton stalks immediately after harvest. Another provided a guide for how to grow cotton in spite of the boll weevil.

Other Georgia Experiment Station publications from 1917 focused, as they do today, on corn and cotton variety trials. The station also conducted trials on soybeans, cowpeas and velvet beans. Researchers planted and harvested the crops and reported back to farmers which varieties perform best. The best cotton variety was pegged as Cleveland Big Boll, which was the most extensively grown at the time. The second best performer was Covington-Toole.

Other leading crops at the time, in order of their importance, were corn ($37 million value/3.4 million total acres),

That was then, this is now

Number of farms in Georgia in 2012	42,257
Land in farms	9,620,836 acres
Average farm size	228 acres
Harvested cropland	3,609,788 acres
Market value of ag products sold	$9.26 billion
Total farm production expenses	$7.5 billion cotton seed ($23 million), sweet potatoes and yams ($4.3 million), oats ($4.2 million /411,664 total acres), and hay and forage ($4 million).

Peanuts, now one of Georgia's top five commodities, were grown on just 160,317 acres. Most of these acres were in the southern half of the state with the leading producer being Brooks County. A fourth of the crop was grown in Brooks, Decatur, Grady and Thomas counties.

Other crops of the time were dry peas (210,315 acres), wheat (93,065 acres), sugar cane (37,046 acres) and tobacco

The Wearing of the Green

Georgia House Agriculture and Consumer Affairs Committee Chair Tom McCall, R-Elberton, wears his green 4-H jacket in honor of 4-H Day at the Capitol Feb. 8, the same day the Georgia Agribusiness Council hosted its annual Legislative Breakfast in Atlanta. "If it wasn't for me coming up in 4-H from the 5th grade, if the House is anywhere to be I wouldn't be there," McCall told legislators and agribusiness leaders gathered for the breakfast. Georgia Agriculture Commissioner Gary W. Black

By Amy H. Carter
Editor

On Feb. 11, 1976, readers of the Farmers and Consumers Market Bulletin first made the acquaintance of one Gary Black, a high school senior serving as state president of the FFA. The annual observance of National FFA Week was nigh, and Black was invited to write a guest column for the paper to mark the occasion.

His topic: the future. It was a humble discourse on the opportunities that FFA had afforded Black to that point in his life. His aspiration at the time was to be a teacher of agriculture. There was no bold pronouncement of any intent to be the next commissioner of agriculture for the state because, frankly, that idea was still three decades in the offing.

"I didn't plan that," Black said.

The decision to offer himself for election as Georgia's 16th Agriculture Commissioner came from a desire to be a strong voice for the future of the state's agriculture industry.

"We had a lot of encouragement from a lot of people," he said.

It was encouragement that started long before his senior year of high school.

"I think you just have to be grateful for the opportunities that come your way," Black said. "But for parents who supported me and an ag teacher who believed in me, I would never have had the chance to write the first article (in the Market Bulletin). But for the opportunity to write that first article my name wouldn't be on the masthead (of the Market Bulletin). It all links together."

One of the many responsibilities that come with being Commissioner of Agri-

ARTY'S GARDEN: The Sharing Economy

By Arty Schronce

Even the clearest photographs and most detailed documents give an incomplete picture of the past. As I looked at advertisements for flowers and plants in copies of the Market Bulletin from the 1930s, I tried to envision the gardens back then. It was like looking at the Grand Canyon through a keyhole or reconstructing the Age of the Samurai by reading haiku. The ads gave a peek but brought as many questions as insights.

For example, I was surprised at the number of people offering lilacs and dahlias, generally known for doing better farther north than here. And there were numerous ads for gooseberries, a more northerly crop. Only last month I advised someone asking about them to try another fruit. Obviously all of these were growing well enough for people to enjoy and offer to others 80 years ago. Perhaps the ones offered were more heat tolerant strains that are now uncommon or unknown in the nursery trade. Perhaps summers were cooler and moister then. Perhaps we have heard for so long that they don't do well here that we stopped trying.

I was not surprised to read "old-fashioned" as a description for some plants. There was, and still is, an appeal in the charm and durability that is often associated with the term in regard to plants. I was surprised to see ads for rock garden plants, the idea of rock gardening not fitting into my notion of what Georgia gardeners, especially ones in rural areas, would be interested in or even aware of. However, Staci Catron, director of the Cherokee Garden Library at the Atlanta History Center, informs me that rock gardens were all the rage in the 1930s.

During the Great Depression people were impoverished but their gardens were not. If you think of the 1930s as a black-and-white Dorothea Lange photograph, please remember that people then appreciated color even if their cameras couldn't capture it. If the ads are any indication, gardens were bursting with color and there was a wider selection of plants available than I thought. The different offerings in a typical issue are too numerous to list here.

We can never know the exact reasons that prompted people to place an ad in the Market Bulletin. Some did it to earn a little extra money. Some, perhaps realizing that money was scarce, were willing to exchange one thing for another. The abbreviations "exc." and "exch." were so common they were never explained. Consider this ad from April 1934:

30 dif. pot flowers, such as begonias, geraniums, fuchsias, 5¢ eac. one of each $1.25 or exc. for garden seed, cabbage, onion plants, cornfield beans. Minnie Louise Willis, Talking Rock.

Dahlias were among the most popular flowers offered in the Market Bulletin during the 1930s. This is Little Beeswings, a variety that was introduced in 1909 and was lost to the gardening world until a gardener shared it with a commercial grower. (The vase is an old Anacin bottle.)

Spider lilies were among the many bulbs offered in the Market Bulletin during the 1930s and are still being offered today. They are not as common in commerce as some other bulbs, but are often shared among flower lovers.

Blue Roman hyacinths offer the same fragrance and refreshing color as "improved" larger varieties of hyacinths, but do so with a lot more charm. They were offered by gardeners in the Market Bulletin during the 1930s. They are still available today and are worth seeking as they are usually only available through gardeners sharing or from specialty bulb dealers.

Mock orange was named for its wonderful fragrance. It was frequently offered by advertisers in the Market Bulletin during the 1930s, but is not common in Georgia landscapes today.

on the gardeners rather than the gardens. Consider these ads from 1933:

As long as supply lasts, one tuber large white, dble. decorative type dahlia will be sent for 4¢ in stamps to cover mailing. A.D. Todd, Sarah.

Folks come see my selection of rare and good flowers, shrubs and trees. Wm. C. McGinnis, Carey Park, Atlanta. River Car Line, Rt. 7

I want to know more about these people. The plants, however rare, seem less interesting than these two sharers. The same is true of the others who reached out through the Market Bulletin and who continue to do so.

I am happy to be able to share a few thoughts through this column and am especially proud to appear in this centennial edition. Thank you for being a reader and thank you for all your comments, ideas and feedback.

Let's keep the sharing alive.

Hello World!

The very first issue of the Georgia Market Bulletin debuted on March 1, 1917. Suggested initially by a field employee of the Georgia Department of Agriculture, the paper came to fruition as the fulfillment of a campaign promise made by J.J. Brown in his successful run for election as Georgia Agriculture Commissioner.

What else was happening in 1917?

- The annual Girl Scout Cookie Sale tradition begins with a service project conducted by the Mistletoe Troop of Muskogee, Okla., U.S.A.
- On Jan. 17, the United States pays Denmark $25 million for the Virgin Islands.
- On Feb. 8, Kennesaw Mountain near Marietta is declared a Civil War Memorial. The War Department transfers ownership to the National Park Service.

 - 2.5 lbs. of meat = 60 cents
 - 4 lbs. of bread = 37 cents
 - ¼ lb. of butter = 14 cents
 - 1lb. of cabbage = 20 cents
- On Feb. 23, the Smith-Hughes National Vocational Education Act of 1917 is signed into law. The act led to the creation of the FFA.

- On April 6, the United States declares war on Germany and enters World War I.
- On May 21, the Great Fire of Atlanta starts in a cotton warehouse near Grady Hospital. The fire burns for 10 hours, destroying 1,938 buildings spanning 73 city blocks and displacing more than 10,000 people. Mansions along Ponce de Leon Avenue are dynamited to create a firebreak.
- On May 29, John F. Kennedy, the 35th President of the United States, is born in Brookline, Mass.
- On July 27, Bacon County is created.
- On Aug. 10, the Food and Fuel Control Act is enacted to conserve supplies and control prices during World War I.

Georgia agriculture was the talk of the Capitol in February during a series of events honoring youth and adults engaged in the state's No. 1 industry.

"This is always an occasion where I know many members of the General Assembly look forward to visiting with you," said Gov. Nathan Deal in his address to the Georgia Agribusiness Council's Legislative Breakfast Feb. 8. "We acknowledge and understand that agriculture is the primary economic driver that keeps our economy going."

A number of high-ranking state leaders followed Deal to the podium to voice their support for Georgia's farmers and agribusinesses. They included Lt. Gov. Casey Cagle, R-Ga.; Speaker of the House David Ralston, R-Blue Ridge; Senate Agriculture and Consumer Affairs Chair John Wilkinson, R-Toccoa; House Appropriations Committee Chair Terry England, R-Auburn; House Agriculture and Consumer Affairs Committee Chair Tom McCall, R-Elberton, and Agriculture Commissioner Gary W. Black.

Deal and Black also addressed young winners of local, regional, state and national equine events on Feb. 9 when the Georgia Agricultural Commodity Commission for Equine hosted its 8th Annual Equine Day at the Capitol. Deal, a former horseman, praised the youth for their discipline and achievement. Black, whose own children showed livestock, praised the parents in the crowd for making the tremendous investments of time and money in their children's futures.

Georgia Farm Bureau Day at the Capitol was Feb. 15, and the legislature celebrated FFA Day at the Capitol Feb. 21.

Cherries were a popular crop in 1917

(2,025 acres). A little less than 6,500 acres were devoted to growing rice, a crop said to have been brought to the south from Africa by enslaved workers.

Peaches, nectarines, apples and pecans topped the list of Georgia-grown fruits. The state's orchards were filled with 10.6 million peach and nectarine trees, 1.9 million apple trees, 357,323 plum and prune trees, 277,658 grape vines, 262,982 pear trees and 49,424 fig trees. Much less common today, 18,465 quince trees and 50,723 cherry trees were also planted across the state.

Just 75,519 pecan trees were grown in Georgia at the time. (Pecans are now among the top 10 commodities by value. Georgia has ranked first in pecan production nationwide for the past 20 years.)

Georgia poultry farmers raised 244,453 chickens. They also raised turkeys, ducks, geese, guinea fowl, pigeons and peafowls. They produced 18 million dozen of eggs. Farmers sold an average of 6.1 million dozen of eggs. Farmers of the time relied on their food crops to feed their families and also bartered with their crops.

Dairy farmers in Georgia produced 75 million gallons of milk and sold 3.9 million gallons. They produced 97,564 gallons of cream, 17,286 pounds of butter fat, 27 million pounds of butter and 399 pounds of cheese. Excluding what was kept for home use, dairy products at the time were valued at $6.7 million.

Aside from work stock, hogs were the most valuable livestock. Of livestock sold or slaughtered, 97,060 were swine and 211,562 were cattle.

GARY W. BLACK: Paper is a link to the past

culture in Georgia is being publisher of the 100-year-old Market Bulletin. Like many of the bulletin's readers, Black remembers his parents receiving the paper. Like his father before him, Black said he bought and sold items through the Market Bulletin over the years.

"I have a couple of buildings on my farm that are from Market Bulletin advertised materials," he said.

Also like many readers, Black and his wife, Lydia, have old recipes their mothers clipped from the pages of past issues.

"I think for the majority of our readers the Market Bulletin is a link to their heritage," Black said. "I suppose we have quite a few readers who are a generation or two removed from their family making a living on the land, and so they feel like their home wouldn't be a home without having a current issue of the Market Bulletin on the coffee table."

That nostalgia for the paper itself has made the bulletin a bit of an anomaly in the publishing industry. For several years the Georgia Department of Agriculture has offered subscribers the option of receiving the paper in digital form only. Fewer than 10 percent of the paper's 40,000 subscribers have elected that option.

"It's not just that it's acceptable in print form. It's expected in print form," Black said. "As long as that's what our readership wants that's what we'll continue to do because we are providing a service."

50 YEARS AGO TODAY: Celebrating Weights and Measures Week

Georgians don't have to farm to benefit from the services provided by their Department of Agriculture. In fact, the way most Georgians know Agriculture Commissioner Gary W. Black is by seeing his name on the inspection stickers affixed to gasoline pumps statewide. Inspectors from the department's Fuel and Measures Division attach those stickers to some 169,000 gas pumps statewide every 18 months after verifying the accuracy of the pumps.

But drivers aren't the only ones who benefit from the division's work. Fuel and Measures inspectors verify the accuracy of more than 3,000 large scales annually. These are scales calibrated to weigh objects 10,000 lbs. and heavier, such as those found at truck stops and livestock yards. They also inspect more than 18,000 small scales annually, such as those found at grocery, hardware and feed stores, and pawn shops.

Fuel and Measures inspectors check 1,300 commercial propane meters each year, and more than 3,000 high-speed fuel meters in places like airports, truck stops, trucking companies, and wholesale bulk plants.

Other duties of the division include inspecting grain moisture meters, compressed natural gas meters, tanks and meters at dairy farms, and firewood sales.

March 1-7, 2017, is National Weights and Measures Week.

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES WEEK, MARCH 1-7

Georgia consumers and merchants were saved over a quarter of a million dollars last year by the services of the Weights and Measures Division of the Georgia Department of Agriculture.

This week, March 1-7, has been named National Weights and Measures Week to commemorate this unique and valuable public service of checking and adjusting scales, wherever there is buying or selling of stated quantities.

The job of the weights and measures officials is to watch over, supervise, and test the accuracy of weighing and measuring devices used in trade and to spot-test the quantities of packaged goods.

The value of the service in dollars and cents is tremendous. Last year, consumer savings in Georgia on scales found in error amounted to approximately $128,700. Errors found in pre-packaged items amounted to almost $5,000. But weights and measures inspectors protect not only the buying public; they also protect the financial state of retailers, processors, and producers who sell by weight.

An average overweight of only 1 per cent because of an obsolete or out-of-balance device can literally put a man out of business. Last year, the Weights and Measures Division found errors which would have cost businessmen about $125,400.

In other words, this service is to protect both buyers and sellers from bad weights and measures.

Throughout the United States, because of effective weights and measures laws—the first passed by Congress was 168 years ago on March 2, 1799—the buyer and the seller are equally protected. The weights and measures inspectors of the Georgia Department of Agriculture see to the correctness of weights and measures under these laws.

Today, correctness of weighing and measuring are taken for granted, whether in buying or selling potatoes, milk, cotton, or beef cattle.

COMRADES IN FARMS: Market bulletins still appeal to farmers and consumers in many states

By Arty Schronce

The Georgia Farmers and Consumers Market Bulletin has a long and storied history, but it is not the only bulletin on the block, nor even the oldest. There are sister publications in other states that also meet the needs of their farmers and residents.

Up the road in Columbia is the South Carolina Market Bulletin, which began in 1913 as a column in The State newspaper. The Weekly Bulletin of Information was designed to unite buyers and sellers of farm goods. Soon other newspapers around the state picked it up as a weekly column, and in 1925 the South Carolina Department of Agriculture began printing it as a stand-alone publication.

Public Information Director Stephanie Sox remembered waiting for the bulletin to arrive in the mailbox as a child and reading it in the recliner with her father. Today, it is published twice monthly. It is distributed in both print and digital form to nearly 14,000 subscribers.

The South Carolina Market Bulletin merges old and new technologies, according to Sox.

"We get digital and handwritten submissions," she said. "Like agriculture itself, we bring together low-tech and high-tech. We offer something for all."

Next door to Georgia, the Alabama Department of Agriculture and Industries offers the Alabama Farmers and Consumers Bulletin. It began in 1918 as the Alabama Market Journal and counts about 10,000 subscribers to its print edition. Digital editions are posted on the department's website one month after each printed issue is distributed.

Editor Amy Belcher credited the longevity of Alabama's Bulletin to its good reputation.

"It is a trusted, consistent publication," she said.

Belcher shared the story of a member of her church who sold his first horse through the bulletin in 1969. He continues to advertise in the paper to this day.

In addition to the advertisements, the bulletin is a valuable tool for distributing information that farmers need to know, such as disease updates and scams targeting the agricultural community - news items that are often buried or ignored by mainstream news sources.

In the Tarheel State is the Agricultural Review, published by the North Carolina Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services. It grew out of a publication at North Carolina State University before moving to the agriculture department in 1926. The Ag Review, as it is nicknamed, is the only similar state publication that does not have the word "bulletin" in its name. What it does have is incredibly loyal readers, said Managing Editor Andrea Ashby.

"They watch for it to arrive on the first of the month. If it is not in their mailbox, they are on the phone with me on the second," she said.

The Ag Review is an institution in North Carolina, and has been a fixture in many homes for generations, Ashby said.

"I have worked for daily and weekly newspapers but have never seen such a de-from Fayetteville to see it for themselves.

New Hampshire lies well north of the bulletin belt, but its Weekly Market Bulletin has served the residents of the Granite State since 1919. The newspaper currently has 5,000 subscribers via mail and online.

"Readers appreciate the advertisements for New Hampshire goods and products and especially look forward to Commissioner Lorraine Merrill's column," said Gail McWilliam Jellie, director of agricultural development.

The Florida Market Bulletin was first published in 1917 and went by the name For Sale, Wanted and Exchange Bulletin. Its mission was to provide small farmers with a statewide advertising forum that was not otherwise available or affordable to them, said Walt Land, chief of education and communication for the Florida Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services. It still serves that mission but is only available online.

The Market Bulletin of West Virginia debuted in 1916 and has gone through many redesigns, the most recent of which added color to the paper in 2015. The publication is released monthly and made available free of charge to 53,000 mail and online subscribers, said Editor Beth Southern.

"We have had an uptick in subscribers in recent years," she said. "The ads are very useful and the What's Cookin' recipe column is perhaps the most popular feature."

The Louisiana Market Bulletin was first published in 1906 and has about 11,000 subscribers. It is posted online after it is printed. Editor Laura Lindsay uses social media to recruit new subscribers who are unfamiliar with the publication.

"We still have our faithful readers who have always subscribed and who read it from cover to cover," she said.

Lindsay described the bulletin as an instrument of education and conservation, as demonstrated by the advertiser who offers mirlitons for sale. A mirliton is an edible member of the gourd family that is known in Louisiana as "the unofficial squash of New Orleans." The advertiser selling them is working to save different local varieties. It is thought that many were lost to Hurricane Katrina in 2005.

The Mississippi Market Bulletin may be the best known of all the market bulletins, having been written about in the fiction of Pulitzer Prize-winning author Eudora Welty. The Mississippi Market Bulletin was started in 1928. Today it has 37,500 subscribers and is posted online five days after publication, according to Claude Nash, who has served as editor for 28 years.

"We still fill a need and what we do still works," he said.

Whether they seek hundreds of acres of farmland, second-hand machines to plant and plow with, heirloom seeds like their grandfathers sowed or handmade quilts like their grandmothers sewed, thousands of market bulletin readers scattered across the South and beyond still find comfort and aid in the pages of their market bulletins.
