Whitefly populations are consuming South Georgia produce crops

By Kendall McWilliams

Most South Georgians can attest to the omnipresence of pests below the Fall Line, but it takes a lot more than a can of “Off!” and a citronella candle for Georgia farmers to ward off the booming whitefly population that is taking a toll on their crops this fall.

Whiteflies are small, winged insects that feed on the foliage of plants and carry a number of crop-crippling diseases. Despite their diminutive size, these insects are causing big problems for produce growers.

Whiteflies have previously had a presence in South Georgia, but their population has increased significantly in the last year. Although whiteflies are typically a fall pest, Georgia produce growers began to see elevated populations relatively early this spring, according to Tim Coolong, Ph.D., a vegetable researcher based on the Tifton Campus of the University of Georgia’s College of Agricultural and Environmental Sciences.

“If we see them in the spring, that means we are going to have a really bad year. Last fall we had a very high population, and that was combined with a very mild winter, so this year we started seeing elevated populations of the whitefly even relatively early in the spring,” said Coolong. “I would say this fall or late summer they became a very serious pest of both vegetables and row crops such as cotton.”

These high populations coupled with a very temperate winter created conditions that have allowed these sap-sucking insects to continue exponential growth, further damaging the crops and the wallets of many South Georgia farmers.

Tift County Schools named the best of the best

The Tift County public school system won top honors at the 2017 Golden Radish Award Ceremony hosted by Georgia Organics in Atlanta Oct. 30. Tift County’s school nutrition program was judged to be the best out of 75 districts recognized for their farm-to-school efforts. More than 40 percent of Georgia’s school districts participate in farm-to-school activities to date. Georgia Agriculture Commissioner Gary W. Black has set a goal to have 20 percent of every meal served in every Georgia public school every day comprised of Georgia-grown products by the year 2020. Pictured with Black, far left, during the presentation of the Outstanding District Award are: Georgia Organics Director Alice Rolls, Tift County Superintendent Patrick Atwater Jr., Tift County Schools Nutrition Director Vanessa Hayes, Georgia Department of Public Health Commissioner J. Patrick O’Neal, Associate Dean for UGA Extension Laura Perry Johnson and Georgia Schools Superintendent Richard Woods.

Georgia logs zero complaints of dicamba drift during 2017 growing season Manufacturers are finalizing label changes for 2018

By Clint Thompson
UGA College of Agricultural and Environmental Sciences

No official pesticide drift complaints have been reported to the Georgia Department of Agriculture this year due to in-season applications of dicamba to cotton and soybeans.

“The GDA believes the absence of any formal dicamba, in-crop drift complaints can be directly attributed to UGA Extension’s unique education and training approach,” said Tommy Gray, director of the GDA’s Plant Industry Division. “During these classroom and one-on-one trainings, growers are provided all the information they need to properly and safely use these products. Perhaps the most important piece of information Georgia growers learn in these meetings is that they must use extreme caution when applying these products to cotton or soybeans in fields where susceptible crops are nearby. You must be aware of your surroundings.”

From 2015 to 2017, UGA Extension agents and specialists coordinated classroom trainings in an effort to share their research-based results and, ultimately, to help Georgia cotton and soybean producers make wise decisions in safely and effectively implementing this technology. To date, 33 of these meetings have reached almost 3,000 participants.

“Understanding the sensitivity of the plants that surround the field when an applicator is ready to make an application is the No. 1 factor that helps us continue to reduce off-target movement of all pesticides,” said UGA Extension weed specialist Stanley Culpepper. “These educational trainings help make applicators and farmers more aware and are a big reason why we haven’t had any complaints to the (Georgia) Department of Agriculture this year.”

Approximately 1.3 million acres of Georgia land planted with tolerant cotton or soybeans were treated with auxin herbicides, such as dicamba, during the growing season.

“Although we had a great year in regard to weed control and stewarding the new auxin technologies, we have much more to do if we want to preserve these weed management tools,” Culpepper said.

UGA Extension personnel will expand educational trainings through one-on-one meetings with producers and applicators statewide to further im-

Georgia Farmers Market Association sponsors AmeriCorps Food Corps members in Walton County schools

The Georgia Farmers Market Association is hosting two FoodCorps service members, Hannah McTier and Deanna Perlman, for a one-year term in Walton County schools. McTier and Perlman will serve at Harmony Elementary and Walker Park Elementary schools teaching hands-on gardening and cooking lessons that inspire students to fall in love with healthy food; collaborate with food service staff to steer students towards the healthiest options in the cafeteria; and work alongside school administrators and teachers to foster a schoolwide culture of health.

FoodCorps has served in Georgia since 2014 in partnership with Georgia Organics, a statewide organization that promotes and supports farm-to-school programs. Over the past three years, FoodCorps Georgia's 21 service members have reached thousands of students through hands-on lessons and supported community and school gardens throughout the state.

According to the organization, nine out of 10 children don't eat enough vegetables, six out of 10 children don't eat enough fruit, and one out of three children — and one out of two children of color — are on track to develop diabetes in their lifetime. Schools can help close that nutrition gap by creating healthy food environments and getting kids on a healthy path to success.

As a national organization that connects children to healthy food in schools, FoodCorps partners with schools in limited-resource communities to create healthy food environments.

FoodCorps service members like McTier and Perlman support and empower the communities they serve by building and expanding school gardens, providing lessons and resources to staff, and encouraging the continued effort toward health for future generations to come.

As the Georgia Farmers Market Association continues to grow and further its support of sustainable agricultural practices, increase whole food access, and strengthen farmers market infrastructure, it hopes that its partnership with FoodCorps will expand awareness, outreach, and educational opportunities to a new audience of young people, said Executive Director Sagdrina Jalal.

"GFMA is a catalyst for promoting good health by networking public and private sectors around local food systems. Our signature local food cooking curriculum, Nourish!, emphasizes the importance of reintroducing fresh, local food to the family table. By partnering with FoodCorps, we will be able to support schools in their role in establishing healthy communities," Jalal said.

"We look forward to seeing Hannah and Deanna engage Walton County students in rich experiences geared toward increasing their knowledge and appreciation for healthy food." While GFMA is serving as the site coordinator for the FoodCorps Service Members in Walton County, their presence depends on a committed network of community partners. Without the support of Walton Wellness, the Walton County Soil and Water Conservation District, and the Walton County Extension Office, McTier and Perlman would not have the tools they need in order to succeed within their schools and within the community.

HAULING MANURE IN GEORGIA: What you need to know

By Melony Wilson-Cowart
UGA Animal Waste Specialist and
Courtney Wilson
GDA CAFO Coordinator

Approximately 1.5 million tons of poultry litter is produced by Georgia's poultry industry each year. A large portion of the litter produced in North Georgia is hauled to South Georgia to fertilize row crops.

The poultry industry has existed in North Georgia for many years, and manure applied to the surrounding land area has saturated those fields with nutrients such as phosphorus. When there is heavy rainfall, phosphorus in the field can run off into nearby surface water. This leads to nutrient enrichment of those water bodies and can cause negative effects such as algal blooms in lakes and ponds. Therefore, it's a good thing when North Georgia poultry producers haul litter from their own nutrient-rich region to nutrient-deficient areas in the southern region of the state. However, manure haulers must follow the Animal Manure Handlers Rules when hauling, piling and applying manure at remote delivery points.

The Animal Manure Handlers Rules in Chapter 40-13-8 of the Georgia Code fall under the jurisdiction of the Georgia Department of Agriculture. These rules not only apply to those transporting manure hundreds of miles, but also to those hauling it a short distance down the road. Exemptions to this rule are:

1. Persons who handle less than 5 tons of dry manure or 5,000 gallons of liquid manure per year.
2. Persons who solely handle manure that originates from their farm and utilize it on the property under their ownership or control.
3. Persons who solely transport and utilize manure on their own farm that originates on another farm. However, such activities must be in accordance with the Animal Manure Handlers Rules.

If you haul manure and do not qualify for the above exemptions, your first step should be to apply for a manure handler's permit from the GDA. If your permit is approved, you will have to meet the following requirements:

Transportation and Equipment

1. Biosecurity precaution should be exercised in the collection, storage, and transportation and depositing or spreading of animal manure.
2. Transport vehicles must be designed and maintained to prevent leaks or spillage. Vehicles must also be covered to prevent blowing or spillage of loose material or liquids. If a spill does occur, cleanup is the responsibility of the manure handler.
3. All land application equipment must be calibrated on an annual basis.

Storage of Animal Manure by Animal Manure Handlers

1. If manure must be stored before land application, all manure must be immediately covered and stored in a manner that to prevents runoff, discharges and breeding of insects. Storage location should be where all rain water is diverted away from the site.
2. If manure is a liquid, then it must be stored in a sealed, leak-proof container.
3. All storage sites must be located a minimum of 200 feet from the neighboring property line.

Land Application

When land-applying manure, there are several aspects that need to be considered. The University of Georgia Extension Service highly recommends getting a nutrient management plan in order to determine proper application rates.

The most important thing to remember during application is to keep the nutrients on the land and out of surface and groundwater. Also, if applying composted mortality, it is important to make sure the carcasses are completely decomposed before land application to comply with the manure haulers rules and the GDA Dead Animal Act Rules. This is important to keep wildlife and pets from dragging the carcasses onto neighboring property and to prevent the spread of diseases.

Due to the above information, the following mandates are in the manure handler rules:

1. Animal manure cannot come into contact with groundwater or excessive runoff from rainfall (do not apply manure before a rain event).
2. Manure analysis needs to be provided to the manure handler from the livestock/poultry producer. Manure samples should be collected and analyzed according to the producer's nutrient management plan or UGA Cooperative Extension Service guidelines.
3. Mortality should be removed from animal manure.
4. If land application is near a surface water body — streams, ponds, springs, sinkholes, wetlands — you must maintain a 100-foot non-vegetated or 35-foot perennial vegetated buffer away from the water body. Also, a 100-foot buffer must be maintained between wells and application areas.
5. Manure must be applied in a manner where it does not leave the property intended for application.

Record Keeping

Record keeping is necessary to be in compliance with the rules, but also for self-protection if questions arise about your manure handling practices. The following rules must be kept and made available to the GDA upon request:

1. Name and address of each person where animal manure originates and is delivered.
2. Animal manure analysis as provided by the livestock/poultry producer.
3. Date and total amount of animal manure delivered or land-applied.
4. The rate of land application of manure.
5. Date and method of equipment calibration.

Penalties

The manure handler rules are very straightforward and easy to understand. The rules, when followed, reduce the risk of environmental pollution and public nuisance. Failure to comply with the manure handlers rules can lead to the revocation of the permit and monetary penalties for each violation.

Georgia Farmers Market Association hosting Food for Thought Conference

The Georgia Farmers Market Association will host its second annual "Food for Thought Conference" Nov. 30 and Dec. 1 at Gwinnett Technical College in Lawrenceville.

There will be four tracks at this year's conference: Market Manager, Homesteader, Farmer and Food Advocate.

The Homesteading track will offer some very insightful sessions on how to make a profit homesteading, herbal medicines, food preservation, and urban homesteading, featuring speakers like herbalist Anne-Marie Bilella, UGA Extension Agent Kristen Sumpter, and Keisha Cameron of Ubuntu. The Farming track will feature sessions on healthy farm families, cold storage solutions, food safety, and business planning, among several others. Clay Oliver of Oliver Farm, Jon Jackson of Comfort Farms, Daniel Parson of Oxford College Farm, and Chelsea Losh of Babe & Sage Farm are some of the feature farmers who will be speaking at this year's conference.

There will also be a dinner after the close of this year's conference, featuring a heritage hog from Comfort Farms, plus heavy vegetarian and vegan hors d'oeuvres crafted by Georgia chefs. Drinks will include craft beer from Monday Night Brewing, local spirits from Independent Distilling Company and shrub and kombucha cocktails mixed by Food Alchemist Jovan Sage. Soul jazz artist AjaRay will provide entertainment.

“New Deal” program helps rural communities ring in the latest technology

On Oct. 21, 1959, the Georgia Market Bulletin made note of the 10th anniversary of the Rural Electrification Administration’s telephone loan program. The REA, which was housed in the U.S. Department of Agriculture, was created as part of President Franklin Roosevelt’s New Deal program in 1935. To this day, the USDA provides low-interest loans for electrification and telecommunications improvement in rural communities through its Rural Development division.

From its inception in 1949 through July 1959, the telephone loan program issued $585.2 million to 673 telephone systems in 45 states, including Alaska. The loans were used to construct 321,000 miles of line and other facilities to bring new or improved phone services to 1.2 million farmers and other rural subscribers. The program made telephone service available to 542,000 customers for the first time.

Today, the telephone is the preferred mode of communication between buyers and sellers who utilize the Market Bulletin. But on Oct. 21, 1959, only 150 of some 500 classified ads for goods and services published in the paper included telephone numbers. Were they so inclined and able, subscribers at the time could speak directly to the Market Bulletin staff in their office on Capitol Square in Atlanta by dialing JACKSON 4-3292.

And while some of our subscribers now favor email over the phone as a means of communication, a great many of our subscribers still live in rural areas without reliable Internet access, which makes a computer as useful to them in 2017 as a telephone would have been in 1949.

-Amy Carter

Jekyll Island Museum

Georgia Farm Bureau Foundation for Agriculture offers $58,000 in scholarships

The Georgia Farm Bureau Foundation for Agriculture is offering $58,000 in scholarships to Georgia students pursuing degrees in agriculture, veterinary medicine, family and consumer sciences or related fields.

Since 1959, the foundation has awarded scholarships to students entering college with plans to pursue careers in agriculture or family and consumer sciences. In 2016, the foundation expanded the scholarship program to offer scholarships to rising college juniors and seniors, technical college students and veterinary college students.

In 2018, the foundation will award scholarships in the following four categories:

Scholarship for Agriculture – This scholarship is for high school students who plan to enter a college that is part of the University System of Georgia, Berry College, Emmanuel College or any accredited college/university in Georgia with an ag program during the 2018-19 academic year to pursue an undergraduate degree in agricultural and environmental sciences, family and consumer sciences, or a related agricultural field. The foundation will award five scholarships of $3,000 each and seven scholarships of $1,500 each.

Technical College Scholarship for Agriculture – This scholarship is for high school students who plan to enroll in a Georgia accredited technical college who will be majoring in an area of agriculture or agriculturally related field of study. The foundation will award five scholarships of $1,000 each.

Rising College Junior/Senior Scholarship for Agriculture – This scholarship is for college students who have at least two semesters of college work remaining to receive an undergraduate degree from a unit of the University System of Georgia, Berry College, Emmanuel College or any accredited college/university in Georgia with an ag program. Applicants must be majoring in agriculture and environmental sciences, family and consumer sciences, or a related agriculture field. The foundation will award 10 scholarships of $2,000 each.

UGA College of Veterinary Medicine Scholarship – This scholarship is for students currently enrolled in the UGA Veterinary Medicine program specializing in large animal/food animal practice. The GFB Foundation will award three scholarships of $2,500 each.

“Agriculture offers young people many career opportunities including ag education teachers, engineers who develop new farm equipment and researchers who study ways to increase the sustainability of our farms,” said Georgia Farm Bureau President Gerald Long, who chairs the GFB Foundation for Agriculture’s Board of Directors. “Georgia Farm Bureau is committed to financially helping students pursue a career in agriculture who will be the future workforce and leaders of Georgia agriculture.”

The deadline to apply for all of the scholarships is March 2, 2018. Visit <http://bit.ly/18GFBAGFoundationscholarapps> for a list of eligible majors/schools, application instructions and to apply. All applications must be submitted online by March 2. Transcripts and letters of recommendation may be submitted online with the application or mailed. Supporting materials that are mailed must be postmarked by March 2.

Scholarship recipients will be announced in spring 2018. Scholarship checks will be sent to the qualifying college/university the recipient is attending and placed in their school account upon verification the student has met all qualifications for the scholarship.

Georgia Farm Bureau is the state’s largest general farm organization. Its volunteer members actively participate in local, district and state activities that promote agriculture awareness to their non-farming neighbors.

The GFB Foundation for Agriculture is a non-profit 501 (c) (3) corporation. Donations are tax-exempt. GFB is using the foundation to finance activities and educational materials designed to increase the agricultural literacy of Georgia residents.

Donations may be made on the foundation website at <http://www.gfbfoundation.org> or checks made payable to the GFB Foundation for Agriculture may be mailed to the GFB Foundation in care of Katie Gazda at P.O. Box 7068 Macon, Ga. 31209.

DICAMBA: Farmers are receptive to training

prove information delivery. Training sessions will continue until 2020.

UGA Extension county agents who have already started meeting with farmers and applicators believe the trainings have been, and will continue to be, worthwhile.

“What (the trainings) have pointed out for me is the level of understanding of the new technology. Even among those who are solid farmers, the level of understanding is low as far as how the chemistry is formulated and how it truly works,” Burke County Extension Coordinator Peyton Sapp said. “The whole approach that Georgia and UGA Extension has taken, embracing the new technology, has heightened the awareness of what’s going on around a particular field.”

Individual trainings involve county extension agents visiting farms to teach growers and applicators about safe use of pesticides. Research identified 15 factors that applicators need to consider when managing off-target pesticide movement, including the spray nozzle, spray pressure, spray speed and the height of the boom above the target.

“We just want folks to realize that when they get to a field, they need to see what’s going on before they make a decision about whether they need to spray or not,” Irwin County Extension Coordinator Phillip Edwards said. “Make sure there aren’t any sensitive crops nearby. Make sure of the wind speed and the lay of the land. A lot of it is common sense, but these trainings serve as a reminder.”

Georgia farmers produce more than 50 high-value vegetable and fruit crops at the same time and sometimes around the same location that agronomic crops like auxin-tolerant cotton and soybeans are produced. All of these crops are vulnerable to pesticide drift.

Empowering growers and producers to keep pesticides on target and away from neighboring fields and gardens is one of UGA Extension’s top priorities.

Pierce County Extension Coordinator James Jacobs has met with the majority of the farmers in his county. He said that all of those farmers who have been trained have been very receptive to the lessons taught and appreciate the time and resources that specialists and agents have shared.

“Taking it to the farm — that’s what we’re doing. It gives farmers, and even those who work for them, an opportunity to ask questions. If we don’t know the answer, we get the answer and get it back to them. That’s the good thing because this is the time to ask questions and put some thought in some things,” Jacobs said.

Hundreds of complaints about off-target drift of herbicides containing dicamba have been reported in several Southern states since it was approved for in-season use. As a result of those complaints, manufacturers are working with the EPA to make several important changes to the labels on dicamba products. As soon as those changes are final, the GDA will make them and the new labels available on the department’s auxin webpage at <http://www.agr.georgia.gov/24c.aspx>.

The changes will be covered in detail in a future issue of the Market Bulletin, as well.

WHITEFLIES: Losses worth millions

years, or the cost to growers in terms of loss, in the eighty to one hundred million dollar range," said Coolong.

Typically whiteflies are manageable pests when present at low levels, but these tiny vectors carry a number of diseases which can be detrimental to crop growth and yields. This year some of the viruses that have spread as a result of whitefly infestation have included tomato yellow leaf curl virus, cucurbit leaf crumple virus, and cucurbit yellow stunting virus.

Sam Watson has seen devastating impacts on his squash, cucumber and bell pepper crops this year. Watson's operation, Chill C Farms in Moultrie, and numerous neighboring farms have felt the repercussions on their fall crops over the last two years.

"I can do everything right on my farm and spend all the money I want to, but at the end of the day the population (of flies) is just too large to combat," Watson said. "They're everywhere."

Although there are currently some resistant seed varieties on the market, private sector seed companies and UGA researchers are working hand-in-hand to conduct trials at research facilities and get resistant materials to reach the growers relatively soon, according to Coolong.

Outside of planting resistant varieties and spraying, there is not much that farmers have been able to do to control the whitefly population. Some farms have experienced up to 100 percent loss, according to Coolong and Watson.

"We do what we feel like we can afford to do and that's about the best you can do," said Watson. "You just have to hope and pray for the best."

FARMERS UNDER 40: Aries Haygood

Farm: M & T Farms Inc.
Hometown: Lyons
Age: 34

Q: How did you get your start farming?

A: When my wife and I got married, I made the decision to come into the farm and work for her interest in the farm alongside of my father-in-law.

Q: What kinds of farming do you primarily spend your time doing?

A: I spend my time like any other typical farmer, from managing the land prep, managing all planting schedules, then producing the best crop and also managing the whole business's day to day operations.

Q: What are the challenges associated with this?

A: Sometimes it is a challenge for farmers to explain clearly to their employees what your goals are so they clearly understand how you would like for certain things to be handled (to) represent the farm's mission. I think it is very important to hire and train good employees to help with the work load that is on the backs of today's farmers.

Q: How do you think being a younger farmer affects you and your business?

A: One of the challenges is trying to find our place in the company or the farm. The older generation worked so hard to build a great foundation. Technology is changing the dynamics of the day-to-day practices, and we find ourselves trying to change certain older practices to a more efficient approach and sometimes that is not received well. One advantage we have as young farmers is that with the technology changing so fast, we are more willing to explore the technology and decide if it is a good fit on our farms.

Q: Do you think this is a positive aspect or does it pose any challenges for you?

A: It can be challenging working with family and trying to implement changes. It is important for us younger farmers to keep a close eye on the changes to ensure ourselves and our parents – or in my case my father-in-law – understand how the changes can help the farm. Anytime we can back up our ideas with facts it is hard to argue against us.

Q: What kind of advice would you give to other young farmers?

A: I would advise other farmers to always try and stay positive and seek the Lord as you farm. Go to him daily and ask for his guidance. Some days it is going to be hard, and some days you will lose your cool, but have that foundation established and know where to go when you feel like there is no way out. Also, plan for some bad years so you don't outgrow yourself. God will bless us, and he will do it on his time-frame he has for us. Just try and be obedient, and go to him for that direction.

Q: What is the best piece of advice someone has given you?

A: Same advice I gave above. I have to remind myself to set aside time to go to the Bible and seek what I am supposed to do. Sometimes we get so busy with the planting and harvest seasons that we forget to do this, and that is when you are making your most important decisions, and we need him to help us make those decisions.

Q: You have had a tough year health-wise. How has your experience changed your view on farming?

A: First thing it did was open my eyes to what is truly important in life. I know now that my relationships with God and my family are more important than worrying about some of the little things on the farm. I also began to look deep into how I can use my farm to minister to the people in my community and help them get through hard times. I knew from the first day of my diagnosis with colon cancer that God was with me and directing me. This encourages me to try and seek how I can honor him and show my appreciation for him being there with me through this journey.

Amy Carter/GDA

Q: What would you be doing if you weren't a farmer?

A: I graduated with a marketing degree from Georgia Southern University. I always thought I would move to Atlanta and find a job that would have been related to that type of background. I really love to be around people and talking with them. I had a teacher in high school who told me one day I would be a good salesman, so maybe I would have pushed to do it.

Editor's Note: With this profile of Vidalia® Onion-grower Aries Haygood, the Farmers and Consumers Market Bulletin is launching an occasional series spotlighting young farmers in Georgia. If you would like to nominate a young farmer for inclusion in this series, please email Leslie Davis at leslie.davis@agr.georgia.gov with the name, contact info and a brief bio of that person.

INDIANAPOLIS – Students from Arizona, California, Georgia, Iowa, Kentucky and Oklahoma have been elected by delegates throughout the United States to serve on the 2017-18 National FFA Officer team.

Holbert is the first female African-American elected to the office of president. Erica Baier, an agricultural education major at Iowa State University, was elected national secretary.

Piper Merritt, an agricultural economics major at Oklahoma State University, was elected central region vice president. Bryce Cluff, an agricultural technology management and education major at the University of Arizona, will serve as western region vice president.

Ian Bennett, majoring in agriscience and environmental systems/plant breeding and genetics at the University of Georgia, was elected southern region vice president. Gracie Furnish, a career and technical education major at the University of Kentucky, will serve as eastern region vice president.

Each year at the National FFA Convention & Expo, six students are elected by delegates to represent the organization as national officers. Delegates elect a president, secretary, and vice presidents representing the central, southern, eastern, and western regions of the country.

National officers commit to a year of service to the National FFA Organization. Each officer travels more than 100,000 national and international miles to interact with business and industry leaders, thousands of FFA members and teachers, corporate sponsors, government and education officials, state FFA leaders, the general public, and more. The team will lead personal growth and leadership training conferences for FFA members throughout the country and help set policies that will guide the future of FFA and promote agricultural literacy.
