Documenting Georgia's cattle history

Foundation seeks stories, photos, donations for one-of-a-kind book

By Amy Carter

amy.carter@agr.georgia.gov

COMMERCE – Even in Georgia, talk of raising cattle conjures images of cowboys with weathered faces and dusty jeans on long drives through dessert scrub on the way to Dodge City or Abilene. John Callaway is a cattleman who speaks of just such things. Not from personal experience, mind you, but from a book he read that inspired a journey to document Georgia's own 250-year history with cattle.

Georgia Agriculture Commissioner Gary Black hosted a fund-raiser at his home Sept. 5 in support of a history book project launched earlier this year by the Georgia Cattlemen's Foundation at Callaway's behest. The organization is actively seeking financial contributions as well as stories and photos documenting the business of raising cattle in Georgia.

Callaway, who operates a ranch in Hogansville, became a collector of state-specific cattle history books during his tenure as president of the Georgia Cattlemen's Association a decade or so ago.

"A number of states have similar type books and I guess the first one I saw was the one from Virginia," Callaway said. "Then through the years, I saw one from North Carolina that's a little more recent. Florida has a got a really nice one. California's got one."

The book commissioned by several Kansas groups, however, spoke to the history buff in Callaway and inspired him to push for something similar here. "150 Years of Kansas Beef" captures the romance and adventure of cattle drives that came out of Texas bound for the railheads in Kansas that sent trains east to the stockyards in St. Louis and Chicago.

Those cities may or may not figure prominently in Georgia's history, but names like Franklin D. Roosevelt and Jackie Kennedy will. Roosevelt as in the former President and part-time resident of Warm Springs, and Kennedy as in the Georgia farm girl turned author who is researching and writing Georgia's cattle history book.

Kennedy grew up on a dairy and beef cattle ranch in LaGrange and sees this project as an opportunity to educate Georgians who did not grow up the way she did and who have formed misconceptions about the livestock industry in Georgia as a result.

"One of the things that bothers me about society the way it is today is because so many of our children are so far removed from agriculture," Kennedy said. "That's been a major concern of mine and as I'm going out visiting with folks a lot of you are saying it's a major concern of yours as well."

42nd Sunbelt Ag Expo offers the latest in farm technology, research

By Jay Jones

jay.jones@agr.georgia.gov

Farmers from across the Southeast will gather in Moultrie next month for the Sunbelt Ag Expo, where vendors will show off the latest technological innovations in farming.

The agriculture trade show opens on Oct. 15 in Moultrie and runs for three days. Chip Blalock, executive director, said about 1,200 exhibitors are expected. The Expo has 100 acres of indoor and outdoor exhibit space and a 600-acre research farm to provide anything that is of interest to farmers, ranchers and agricultural producers.

"We're looking forward to a full house of exhibitors," Blalock said.

Last year, the Expo felt the effects of Hurricane Michael which struck Georgia a week before the 2018 show opened. Blalock said attendance dropped 29 percent.

"All in all, we were very blessed, number one, to have the show, and number two, to have a good, quality crowd to come out," he said. "Actually, it was the start of a healing process coming to a show that everyone loves, but it was definitely a bittersweet week for sure being so close to the hurricane damage."

Expo organizers are expecting a strong attendance closer to their average of 85,000 this year. Blalock also noted that Michael is still on the minds of a lot of people and storm preparation will be part of some of the demonstrations planned.

"I know in the cattle demos and the sheep and goat demos, they will have seminars specifically targeted toward 'What did we learn from Hurricane Michael,' and 'What can we do differently next time.' It's about having kind of a game plan because really and truly for this region of the country this is the first major hurricane we had since 1985."

Among the new technologies on display this year is a newly designed stalk shredder puller from Kelley Manufacturing Company of Tifton. The farm machine is developed for cotton, corn, soybean and vegetable crops and promises farmers more benefits in soil conditioning at less cost.

"After the crop is harvested, it makes one pass, tills the stalks, shreds it and puts it back in the soil which helps us fight nematodes," Blalock said. "Because it makes that one pass and plows it back under it saves on energy costs and is more environmentally friendly."

Kelly Peele, advertising manager at Kelley Manufacturing, said the Expo provides her company a unique opportunity to reach out to both farmers and dealers in showing their products as well as hearing from people.

"We're able to really communicate with our customers. We work strictly with a dealers' network, so a lot of the dealers come by and we can talk with them, let them know what's new and get some feedback from them," Peele said. "We also get a lot of feedback from the farmers themselves at the Expo and learn what they are looking for in equipment."

Kelley Manufacturing is among the few vendors who have attended all 42 Expos. Peele said that streak says a lot about how

Georgia First Lady Marty Kemp promotes Georgia Grown to state employees

Georgia First Lady Marty Kemp serves samples of Georgia Grown Sweet Potato, Apple and Kale Salad with Grilled Chicken to state employees.

Georgia First Lady Marty Kemp joined Georgia Grown Executive Chef Holly Chute in the state employees' cafeteria in the James H. "Sloppy" Floyd Building in Atlanta Sept. 10 to promote healthy Georgia-grown fruits, vegetables and nuts as the basis of a healthy diet. Mrs. Kemp assisted Chute in preparing Sweet Potato, Apple and Kale Salad with Grilled Chicken, then served samples to state employees who watched the demonstration. The salad was also offered for sale to diners visiting the cafeteria that day. Mrs. Kemp and Gov. Brian Kemp have been vocal supporters of Georgia

Grown since taking office, and Mrs. Kemp said the cooking demo with Chef Holly was another opportunity to do that. "I definitely want to show our support for farmers and Georgia Grown programs any time I can be out and be helpful," she said.

Georgia Grown products used in the demonstration included:

Oliver Farms Pecan Oil, Honey Shack Honey, Herring Farms Sweet Potatoes, Jaemor Farms Gala Apples, Beautiful Briny Sea Campfire Seasoning, Baker Farms Kale, Sunnlyland Farms Pecans, Prestige Farms Chicken

Rules governing Classified Advertisements in the Market Bulletin

The Georgia Department of Agriculture enforces certain rules regarding Classified advertisements published in the Farmers and Consumers Market Bulletin. Our over-arching rule is that items advertised be farm- or agriculture-related. More important is the requirement that livestock owners provide documentation attesting to the health of their animals before we publish ads offering those animals for sale. Our goal is to protect the viability of Georgia Agriculture and the farmers and consumers who look to us as a reputable venue for buying and selling goods and services.

As part of our year-long transition to a new software platform that will modernize production of this paper, we've been working with various divisions of the GDA and other state agencies to update the rules that govern Classified advertisements submitted for publication. Those rules are accessible online at <http://www.agr.georgia.gov/advertising-information.aspx>, and will be published in the paper periodically as space allows.

Animals in General: Animals advertised for sale must be healthy and free of disease to protect consumers from purchasing unhealthy animals, and to prevent the spread of disease to other animals.

Out-of-State Animals: To ensure consumers are purchasing healthy animals and to protect the health of animals already in Georgia, out-of-state animals must meet all Interstate Animal Health Movement Requirements along with other requirements for specific species.

Goats and Sheep, Swine, and Poultry/Fowl for sale: Licenses and health requirements for these categories are in place to protect the livestock industry from disease and prevent the spread of disease. These regulations also assist in monitoring the movement of the animals throughout the state. Certain requirements in these categories comply with federal law.

Equine for Sale: According to the rules of the Georgia Department of Agriculture Animal Industry Division, equine being sold must test negative for equine infectious anemia within the previous 12 months, and the original test record issued by the laboratory must be transferred to the new owner.

Boarding Facilities: Rules regarding stables in the Georgia Animal Protection Act set a standard by which equine should be cared for. Boarding and breeding facilities must be licensed to confirm they are adhering to these rules and are caring for equine in a humane manner.

Poultry/Fowl Requiring Permit/License: Wood ducks are protected under the Migratory Bird Treaty Act, which was enacted to preserve the populations of native birds in the United States. Under this law, it is illegal to sell any protected birds without a valid federal permit. Georgia law does not allow for quail to be used for commercial purposes unless it is a quail that has been hatched and raised in a pen or coop. The Commercial Quail Breeder's License assures the birds being sold satisfy these requirements.

Non-traditional Livestock: The Georgia Department of Agriculture follows regulations set in place by the United States Department of Agriculture. Since both Brucellosis and Tuberculosis are contagious and can be transmissible to humans, certain species of non-traditional livestock for sale must be accompanied by negative tests. Identification of individual animals allows for easy traceability of movement and helps prevent the spread of disease.

Ag Seed for Sale: A current state laboratory report verifies the seed for sale has reliable quality as well as accurate labeling information. The accuracy of the required labeling information allows consumers to make informed decisions before purchasing.

Flowers Requiring Permits: A permit to sell protected plants is required to maintain the population of such plants and keep them from extinction by trade. Ginseng is protected under the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species of Wild Fauna and Flora, so dealers and growers must register with the Georgia Department of Natural Resources (DNR) annually. This allows for the DNR to keep track of growing and selling, as well as protect ginseng from extinction.

Fish and Supplies: Grass carp are a non-native species in Georgia. To prevent grass carp from reproducing and becoming an invasive species, breeders must obtain a Wild Animal License that ensures the carp being sold are sterile. It is illegal to catch and sell game fish from public waters. Entities producing and selling these fish must have an Aquaculture Registration Permit that certifies they were raised domestically.

GUEST COLUMN: September is Suicide Prevention Awareness Month

By Judy Fitzgerald
Commissioner, Georgia
Department of Behavioral Health and Developmental Disabilities

September is Suicide Prevention Awareness Month, and this is an especially important issue to discuss right now. In fact, talking about suicide out loud – regularly, repeatedly, and thoughtfully – is part of the solution. There are many ways that you can help prevent suicide regardless of your age, race, status or background, but first, let's remember what we all can do, and that is to offer a message of hope and support.

Each person's life matters, and help is available for those who are struggling with feelings of hopelessness. We know that treatment for issues related to mental health and addiction can save lives. Hope comes in the form of the Georgia Crisis and Access Line: 800.715.4225. GCAL is a free and confidential hotline provided by the Georgia Department of Behavioral Health and Developmental Disabilities.

Available 24/7, GCAL is staffed by licensed clinicians and caring professionals trained in suicide prevention. Please save the number in your phone and share it with everyone you know to increase awareness that help is available 24/7 statewide. If you have an iPhone or Android, you can also download the MyGCAL app, which allows users to call, text or chat with GCAL professionals.

In the last two decades, the rate of suicide has increased by 16 percent in Georgia and 30 percent across the nation. Suicide is a tragic occurrence that devastates families and communities. It is also preventable, and each of us has a role to play. By learning how to recognize risk factors and warning signs, as well as what to do about them, you can be part of the solution.

There is no single cause for suicide. Factors that are associated with suicide include mental illness, substance use disorders, painful losses, exposure to violence, and social isolation. Below are warning signs that may indicate when a person is at risk:

- Talking about wanting to die or kill oneself
- Looking for a way to kill oneself
- Talking about feeling hopeless or having no reason to live
- Talking about feeling trapped or being in unbearable pain
- Talking about being a burden to others
- Increasing the use of alcohol or drugs
- Withdrawing or feeling isolated
- Showing rage or talking about seeking revenge
- Displaying extreme mood swings

Knowing the risk factors and warning signs provides an opportunity for each of us to intervene. If you are concerned about someone who may be considering suicide, remember these four action steps: ASK-LISTEN-STAY-HELP.

Ask openly and compassionately, "Are you thinking about suicide?" Listen to the person without judgment; avoid trying to "fix it." Stay with the person if he or she is suicidal; keep him or her safe until help arrives. If self-harm seems imminent, call 911. Then help the person find the right kind of help by calling the Georgia Crisis and Access Line 24/7 at 800.715.4225. You can also text or chat with GCAL professionals using the MyGCAL app.

Beyond stopping a suicide at the moment of crisis, there are three easy and effective prevention strategies that can help people who are struggling.

First, consider whether anyone in your network of friends and family might be socially isolated. Do you have homebound grandparents, neighbors, etc., who receive few visitors? What about a young person with thousands of "friends" on social media but few friends in real life? Talk to them, make a connection, and engage.

Second, become acquainted with suicide prevention resources in case you have to respond to a friend, co-worker or stranger in crisis. Take a moment right now to program the GCAL number, 800-715-4225, in your phone and download the MyGCAL app for Apple and Android. Download the app on your children's phones too. These simple steps could make a life-saving difference if you or someone you care about is ever in need or in a position to help someone who is at risk of suicide.

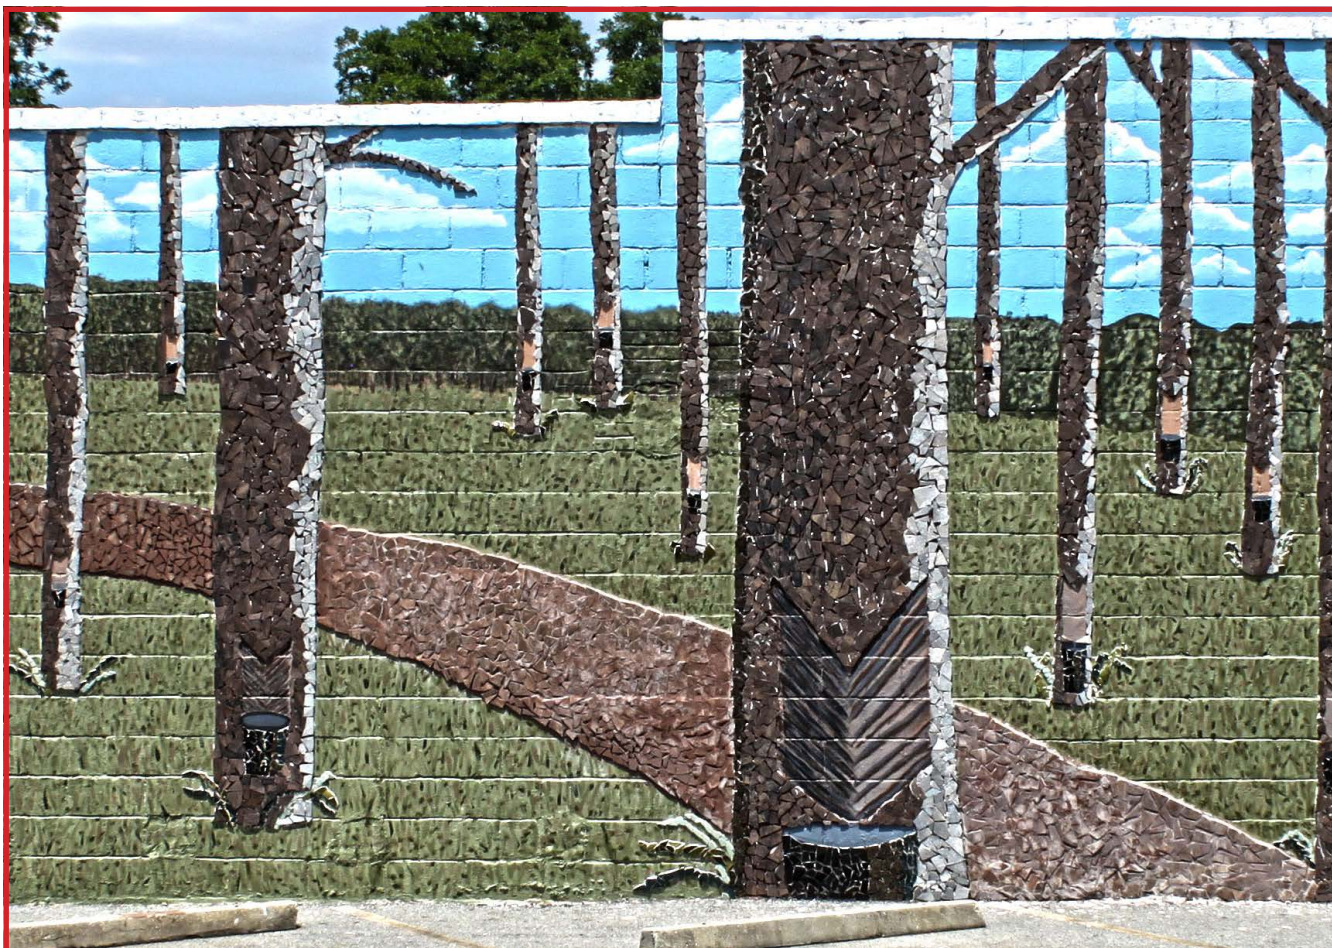

Finally, if you want to learn more, consider attending a suicide prevention training or event in your area, or read about suicide prevention from trustworthy sources, such as samhsa.gov/find-help/suicide-prevention. For clinicians seeking specialized training, DBHDD's Mental Health Awareness Training Project offers intervention and suicide-risk screening training. Regardless of your role, there are opportunities to learn more and do more.

Suicide prevention is everyone's business. It requires each of us to be actively engaged and willing to fight the associated stigma that keeps so many in pain, silent and isolated. By working together, we can help prevent the tragedy of suicide from hurting another Georgia family and help our state and nation get to zero suicide.

Georgie's Drive Thru Portal

Hello! I'm Georgie, the Georgia Grown mascot. I travel the state of Georgia promoting our No. 1 industry, agriculture! The other day, my children and I were exploring the woods at Grandpa's farm when we spotted a cat face on the trunk of a pine tree. Ginny asked me what the cat face was. I told her that about 100 years ago, Dr. Charles Hertzy from the University of Georgia invented a new way to collect pine tree sap called the Hertzy cup and gutter system. To collect the sap from trees, grooves were cut in the bark with a tool called a bark hack. The V-shaped pattern on the tree was called a cat face. The sap ran down the grooves and into a cup. The sap, also called naval stores, was collected and put into barrels. It was then taken to a still and boiled to make turpentine for use in manufacturing paint, varnish, medicine and chewing gum. The last commercial turpentine operation in Georgia was near Soperton. They collected their last barrels in 2001. One still that is still running is in Portal, the Turpentine City. Every first weekend in October, they celebrate the Portal Turpentine Festival and fire up the still to teach others their part in Georgia history.

A mural painted on the side of a building in Portal depicts "cat faces" carved into pine trees for the purpose of collecting sap or naval stores for making products such as paint, varnish, medicine and chewing gum. (Lee Lancaster/GDA)

MY TRACTOR STORY: Granddaddy Darsey's 1952 Ford 8N

By Sheena and Teena, Darsey Family Farms
Surrency

Our Granddaddy Gordon Darsey purchased the tractor brand new in 1952 with the planters, fertilizer distributor and cultivator frame. He had a Farmall one-row Super A but made the change for the two-row for quicker planting. Gordon and his son Edsel farmed over 100 acres for more than 30 years with the tractor. It was given to Edsel in 1997 and he has since passed it on to his daughters as of 2017. It has worked on the farm for over 67 years planting, plowing, pulling trailers of shelled corn to the bins, hauling hay and peanuts vines to feed the cows. It is our hope that the next generation will cherish the 8N and continue to use it on our family centennial farm.

Do you have a tractor story to tell? We'd love to share it with our readers. Write to Lee Lancaster in care of the Market Bulletin, or email lee.lancaster@agr.georgia.gov.

COOK GEORGIA GROWN: Pecan-crusted pork tenderloin with bourbon mustard sauce

-Recipe courtesy Georgia Pecan Growers Association/
georgiapecan.org

Ingredients

Non-stick cooking spray
1 (1-lb) pork tenderloin, trimmed
2-3 Tbsps. Dijon mustard
1 cup pecan pieces, ground
1 Tbsp. chopped fresh thyme
1/4 tsp. cayenne pepper, or to taste
Salt and black pepper, to taste

Sauce

3/4 cup chicken broth
1/4 cup bourbon
1 Tbsp. cornstarch
2 Tbsps. dark brown sugar
1 Tbsp. Worcestershire sauce
2 tsps. soy sauce
1/4 cup Dijon mustard
3 Tbsps. unsalted butter, cut into small pieces
Salt, to taste

Instructions

Preheat oven to 350 degrees.

Line a baking sheet with aluminum foil, preferably non-stick and spray lightly with cooking spray.

Rub the mustard evenly over the pork. Combine ground pecans, thyme, cayenne, salt and black pepper to taste and spread in a pan. Roll the tenderloin in the nut mixture, coating well on all sides.

Transfer to the prepared baking sheet and spray with cooking spray. Bake for 25 to 30 minutes or to an internal temperature of at least 145 degrees.

SAUCE: Meanwhile, prepare sauce. Combine chicken broth, bourbon and cornstarch in a small saucepan. Bring to a boil. Reduce heat to medium low. Whisk in sugar, Worcestershire, soy sauce and mustard and stir until smooth. Whisk in butter. Add salt to taste. Serve with pork.

Farm-to-School programs recognized for excellence

Georgia Organics recognized 90 school districts for their farm-to-school programs at the 2019 Golden Radish Awards, held at Mercedes Benz Stadium in Atlanta Sept. 17. The Elbert County School District won the overall award for its program, which spotlights a different Georgia-grown product monthly in a recipe developed by students enrolled in the Family and Consumer Sciences department at Elbert High School. Students at the middle school help School Nutrition staff prepare the recipe to be served in cafeterias system-wide. Misty Friedman, farm to school/nutrition coordinator for the Georgia Department of Agriculture, presented Kristin Sims, a pre-k teacher in Bleckley County, with the Georgia Grown Teacher of the Year award. Sims schools the system's youngest students in a Farm to School/Ag in the Classroom program. And Dougherty County farmer Fredando "Farmer Fredo" Jackson received the Georgia Department of Education's Farmer of the Year Award for his efforts to supply produce and expertise to the school system.

Also with Jackson are, from left: Dr. Kathleen Toomey, Georgia Commissioner of Public Health; Michael Martin, director of UGA Extension County Operations; Amy Jacobs, Commissioner of the Georgia Department of Early Care and Learning; and Joe Reynolds, chair of the Georgia Organics board of directors.

GATE CORNER: Come see us at the Georgia National Fair

By Bryant Kersey
GATE Program Manager

The Georgia National Fair in Perry is coming up Oct. 3-13, and GATE representatives will be present both weekends in the Georgia Grown Building. Please stop by to ask that question that hasn't been answered or just to say hello.

Recently we have had many calls for assistance in choosing the proper NAICS (North American Industry Classification System) Code for farming operations. Because today's farms have multiple functions it is a challenge to choose the correct code. In most cases you'll look at the entity that produces the bulk of the farm's revenue. Just know our staff of professionals is ready to assist you and provide the best answer to any and all your questions.

We have made some changes to the program that are noteworthy. We've heard from several callers who never received their GATE cards by mail but waited several months to notify us. Please let us know within 45 days after paying for the card if you haven't received your card by mail. After 45 days, a fee of $30 will be charged for a replacement card. Also, our refunds policy only allows us to grant refunds when multiple payments are made on the same account, or when a duplicate account has been created. Refunds cannot be given if a farm is sold or is no longer operating.

Remember: the cut-off date for a GATE Card to use at those end-of-year sales is the first business day of December 2019. If you're unsure about the tax-exempt status of an item, email the Georgia Department of Revenue at gate.referral@dor.ga.gov to get your answer.

Brim, Rhodes to be inducted into Georgia Agricultural Hall of Fame

By Clint Thompson

This year's Georgia Agricultural Hall of Fame inductees have impacted Georgians from the dinner table to the fairgrounds.

Bill Brim, a Tift County farmer and strong advocate for Georgia agriculture, and Foster Rhodes, who was instrumental in establishing the Georgia National Fairgrounds and Agricenter in Perry, will be inducted into the Georgia Agricultural Hall of Fame as part of the 65th University of Georgia College of Agricultural and Environmental Sciences Alumni Association Awards banquet on Oct. 4.

"Mr. Brim and Mr. Rhodes are so deserving of this distinguished honor for their lifetime of impact on their businesses, their communities and our state," said Brent Marable, president of the UGA CAES Alumni Association Board of Directors. "The continued contributions that each of them makes to the agricultural sector are helping secure food, fiber and shelter for the next generation and beyond."

Inductees are nominated by the public and selected by the CAES Alumni Association's awards committee. Nominees must possess the following characteristics: impeccable character, outstanding leadership, noteworthy contributions to Georgia's agricultural landscape, and recognition for achievements in agriculture, among others.

Brim established himself as an industry leader when he, along with Ed Walker, purchased Lewis Taylor Farms in 1985. Over the next five years, Brim helped transform Lewis Taylor Farms into a diversified transplant and vegetable production farm operation.

Bill Brim

When Brim became a co-owner of Lewis Taylor Farms, it had only 87,000 square feet of greenhouse production space. The farm now boasts 81 greenhouses with more than 649,000 square feet of production space.

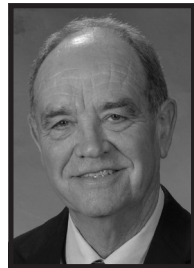

With Brim's expertise in vegetable production, he was a natural fit to collaborate with scientists from the UGA CAES in various research projects with far-reaching implications.

"Bill Brim is obviously one of the best produce and agonomic producers in the world. He took me under his wing and helped me learn not only how to identify, but how to grow and produce vegetables," said Stanley Culpepper, UGA Cooperative Extension weed specialist.

Brim's most important attribute may be his willingness to speak his mind and stand up for farmers everywhere at the state and federal levels.

He served on the U.S. Department of Agriculture Farm Service Agency State Committee, where he and fellow committee members reviewed and interpreted USDA policy and guidelines relating to farm bill programs and the implementation of on-the-farm applications for farmers and agricultural businesses across Georgia.

"Somebody's got to speak up. I just happened to be the one that wasn't scared to speak up and talk about what we needed down here," Brim said.

Foster Rhodes

Rhodes helped establish the Georgia National Fairgrounds and Agricenter in Perry, working from the conceptual state in the mid-1980s to the first Georgia National Fair in 1990. He served an important role in the early years of the fairgrounds as the point person with city council members, county commissioners and state leaders in securing the land needed for the Agricenter.

Because of Rhodes' leadership and dedication, Georgia's youth have a facility to showcase their projects and the state's agriculture industry can be promoted. Since the Agricenter opened in 1990, it has attracted approximately 22 million people and made a $1.5 billion economic impact. Approximately 850,000 people visit the fairgrounds and Agricenter annually, giving them some exposure to agriculture.

Rhodes' efforts were previously recognized in 2016 when the Beef and Dairy Arena at the fairgrounds was named the Foster Rhodes Beef and Dairy Arena.

"Professionally and personally, I have the utmost regard for Foster. He is an outstanding member of the Georgia agricultural community and is highly respected by his peers," said Chip Blalock, executive director of the Sunbelt Agricultural Exposition and a former Extension county agent. "I know Foster to be a strong Christian family man and I admire his integrity and honesty. There is no one more dedicated to and supportive of Georgia agriculture. He always goes beyond the norm to make a positive impact on his community and state."

The Alumni Award of Excellence and Young Alumni Achievement Award recipients will also be honored.

This year, recipients of CAES Alumni Awards of Excellence include Charlie Broussard, Ken Foster, Jaime Hinsdale Foster and Andrea B. Simao. CAES Young Alumni Achievement awards will be presented to Sara Dunn, Tamlin Hall and Franklin West.

Sponsors of the event include the UGA CAES Alumni Association, UGA CAES and Farm Credit Associations of Georgia.

Georgia agricultural producers affected by Hurricane Michael can now apply for federal disaster assistance

Georgia agricultural producers affected by Hurricane Michael or other natural disasters in 2018 can now apply for assistance through the Wildfire and Hurricane Indemnity Program Plus.

More than $3 billion is available through the disaster relief package passed by Congress and signed by President Trump in early June. WHIP+ is a successor to the 2017 Wildfire and Hurricane Indemnity Program that was authorized by the Bipartisan Budget Act of 2018.

WHIP+ includes new programs to cover losses for milk dumped or removed from the commercial market and losses of eligible farm-stored commodities due to eligible disaster events in 2018 and 2019. Also, prevented planting supplemental disaster payments will provide support to producers who were prevented from planting eligible crops for the 2019 crop year.

WHIP+ will be available for eligible producers who have suffered losses of certain crops, trees, bushes or vines in counties with a Presidential Emergency Disaster Declaration or a Secretarial Disaster Designation (primary counties only). Producers in 80 Georgia counties are eligible for aid resulting from disaster losses in 2018 only. A list of all U.S. counties that received qualifying disaster declarations and designations is available online at farmers.gov/recover/whip-plus.

Because grazing and livestock losses, other than milk losses, are covered by other disaster recovery programs offered through USDA's Farm Service Agency, those losses are not eligible for WHIP+. Disaster losses must have been a result of hurricanes, floods, tornadoes, typhoons, volcanic activity, snowstorms or wildfires that occurred in 2018 or 2019.

"After months of waiting and partisan gridlock in D.C., Georgia farm families are finally receiving the relief that they desperately need," said Georgia Gov. Brian Kemp. "From the beginning, U.S. Senators Isakson and Perdue, Governor Deal, the General Assembly and Georgia Agriculture Commissioner Gary Black stood with those devastated by Hurricane Michael, and we doubled down on that support this past legislative session with millions more in relief dollars.

"Our delegation fought long and hard for this package, and I greatly appreciate their refusal to give in to Congressional dysfunction. I also thank the President and his administration for their support of Georgia agriculture, and I look forward to working with them to ensure that these funds are delivered in a quick, efficient manner."

Hurricane Michael swept through Georgia in October 2018, destroying $2.5 billion worth of timber and crops ripe for fall harvest. President Donald Trump, Vice President Mike Pence and Agriculture Secretary Perdue traveled to Georgia within days of the storm to view damaged areas and meet with growers in communities affected by the storm.

It was around that same time that former Gov. Nathan Deal called an emergency session of the General Assembly to consider a package of disaster aid to tide farmers over until federal funding came available. The legislature approved $55 million in direct loans to growers in November 2018 and followed up with an additional $20 million during regular session in 2019.

"I applaud the implementation of this first component of the recovery package as it shows the President, Secretary and Congress have kept their word in assisting our farmers recover," said Georgia Agriculture Commissioner Gary Black. "I would also like to recognize and salute the commitment of the grassroots effort of the USDA staff in every county in Georgia for their key role in serving the farm families in our state."

-From Market Bulletin Staff reports and USDA media releases.

Other USDA Disaster Recovery Assistance

When major disasters strike, USDA has an emergency loan program that provides eligible farmers low-interest loans to help them recover from production and physical losses.

Livestock owners and contract growers who experience above normal livestock deaths because of specific weather events, as well as from disease or animal attacks, may qualify for assistance under USDA's Livestock Indemnity Program.

Producers who suffer losses to or are prevented from planting agricultural commodities not covered by federal crop insurance may be eligible for assistance under USDA's Non-insured Crop Disaster Assistance Program if the losses were from natural disasters.

USDA's Emergency Assistance for Livestock, Honeybees and Farm-Raised Fish Program provides payments to producers of these commodities to help compensate for losses because of diseases (including cattle tick fever) and adverse weather or other conditions, such as blizzards and wildfires, that are not covered by other disaster programs.

USDA also provides financial resources through its Environmental Quality Incentives Program for immediate needs and long-term support to help recover from natural disasters and conserve water resources.

Additionally, the Emergency Watershed Protection Program helps local communities immediately begin relieving imminent hazards to life and property caused by floods.

The Emergency Conservation Program provides funding and technical assistance for farmers and ranchers to rehabilitate farmland damaged by natural disasters and help put in place methods for water conservation during severe drought.

For more information on FSA disaster assistance programs, contact your local USDA service center or visit farmers.gov/recover. For all available USDA disaster assistance programs, go to USDA's disaster resources website, <https://www.usda.gov/topics/disaster/storms>.

Georgia agricultural producers in these 80 counties who suffered disaster-related losses in 2018 are eligible to apply for assistance through WHIP+:

UGA organizes interdisciplinary research team to study whiteflies

By Clint Thompson

Silverleaf whiteflies devastated Georgia's cotton and fall vegetable crops last year. In response to this crisis, a team of University of Georgia College of Agricultural and Environmental Sciences research and UGA Cooperative Extension specialists is studying the pests statewide to help cotton and vegetable farmers avoid another year of disappointing crops.

"Teams are an important part of UGA. Many of the issues agriculturists face today require a collection of scientists from differing disciplines with differing expertise to address complex issues. The silverleaf whitefly fits the bill here," said Phillip Roberts, UGA Extension cotton and soybean entomologist and Whitefly Team member. "Not only are whiteflies a direct pest of plants as a result of feeding, but they also transmit several viruses to vegetables that can have a devastating effect on virus-susceptible crops."

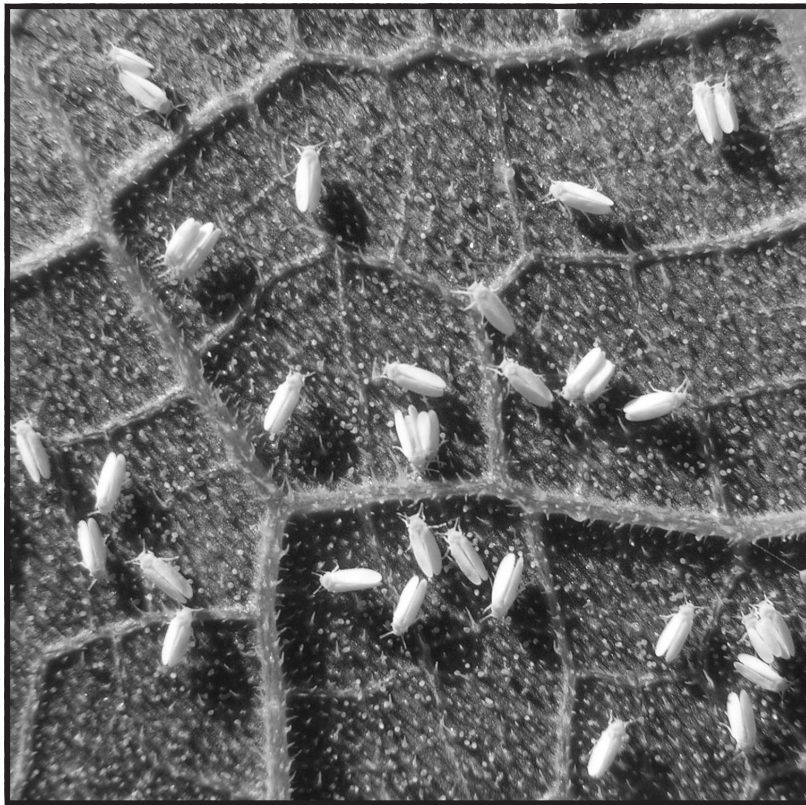

UGA Extension established the UGA Whitefly Team, and each team member brings a specific area of whitefly expertise. In addition to Roberts, the team includes:

- Jason Schmidt, entomologist specializing in biocontrol
- Mark Abney, peanut research entomologist
- Mike Toews, cotton and soybean research entomologist
- Stormy Sparks, UGA Extension vegetable entomologist
- Rajagopalbabu Srinivasan, vector biologist
- Bhabesh Dutta, UGA Extension vegetable pathologist
- David Riley, vegetable research entomologist
- Tim Coolong, UGA Extension vegetable specialist
- Sudeep Bag, crop virologist
- Apurba Barman, postdoctoral candidate

The mild winter of 2016-17 enabled whiteflies to continue to feed on plant hosts and become a major nuisance for cotton growers in the early summer of 2017.

Fortunately for Georgia farmers, whitefly populations are considerably down when compared to this time last year. A colder winter, including several hard freezes in January, eliminated the reproductive host plants, like cultivated crops and weeds, on which whiteflies feed.

"We're not seeing any significant outbreaks of viruses yet. It was probably June or July when we saw that last year, right at the end of the spring crop," Sparks said. "Last year, we had growers who were treating whiteflies in the middle of winter on some of their winter crops. On the spring crops, they were being treated by mid-May. Right now, it's nothing like we experienced last year."

Whiteflies migrate from winter vegetables to spring vegetables to agronomic crops, like cotton, to fall vegetables and back to winter vegetables, according to Roberts. If producers don't adequately scout for these insects, they could face a whitefly epidemic.

"Failure to properly manage whiteflies in any one of these systems could have negative consequences on remaining cropping systems," Roberts said. "Early detection of whiteflies in any cropping system is critical for successful management, as appropriate insecticides must be applied before the population builds to damaging levels."

Whiteflies cause feeding injury issues in vegetables and transmit two new viruses: cucurbit leaf crumple virus and cucurbit yellow stunting disorder virus. Vegetables like squash, zucchini, cucumber, cantaloupe and snap beans are highly susceptible to these viruses. Commercial cultivars that have resistance or tolerance to these pathogens are not available.

According to the UGA crop loss estimates, these viruses caused between 30 and 50 percent of squash and cucumber crop loss and nearly 80 percent of snap bean crop loss in fall 2017.

Dutta and Coolong screen different cultivars and germplasms, and they advance breeding lines of squash, snap beans and zucchini for cucurbit leaf crumple virus resistance. They hope to find resistance lines for the viruses that whiteflies transmit.

Barman, a postdoctoral researcher under Toews, set yellow sticky traps at 125 field sites across southern Georgia to detect whiteflies. Each week, Barman and his colleagues drive more than 800 miles to collect and replace traps in 24 different counties. The traps are located as far west as the Georgia-Alabama border; as far east as Vidalia; as far north as Cordele; and as far south as Thomasville.

"I hope that our traps will be able to detect when there is a whitefly population buildup or migration in one of those specific locations. Following that lead, we should be able to target the crop or host plants responsible for such population buildup around the trap. Simultaneously, we could communicate with the county Extension agents and consultants to manage that whitefly population locally," Barman said.

He will also provide weekly updates on whitefly numbers through an interactive, online map, which will allow the UGA Whitefly Team to monitor any whitefly hot spots throughout the growing season.

Scouting and timely insecticide applications remain the best course of action against whiteflies. However, UGA experts encourage growers to conserve beneficial insects and only apply insecticides when whitefly infestations are found. Destroying whitefly host crops after harvest will also eliminate further reproduction.

"We need to watch for them in the next three months. For the most part, in Tift and Colquitt counties, it's not a matter of if they're going to show up, but when," Sparks said.

For more information about whiteflies, contact your local UGA Extension office at 1-800.275.8421.

Georgians log 4,567 counts during inaugural Great Georgia Pollinator Census

By Merritt Melancon

More than 4,000 Georgians in 133 counties participated in the nation's first statewide pollinator census, logging more than 133,963 insect interactions.

The logging counts from the Aug. 23-24 Great Georgia Pollinator Census finished with 4,567 counts during the groundbreaking citizen science exercise.

"I think the story now is how excited people were to participate," said Becky Griffin, school and community garden coordinator for University of Georgia Cooperative Extension and the pollinator count organizer. "I have heard several times that people will never look at their gardens the same way again and that slowing down for 15 minutes to look at the insects was eye-opening.

"I am so very, very grateful for all of the Georgia citizens who were willing to give up their time to support our pollinators."

Each participant spent 15 minutes focusing on one individual blooming plant. They tallied the number of insects and the types of insects they witnessed during those 15 minutes and then recorded and reported the type of plant they selected, the time of day, the weather and their location.

Griffin is working with other pollinator experts to crunch the data to look for trends about which pollinators were most populous in different parts of the state. Citizen scientists from every corner the state – from southwest Georgia woodlands to downtown Atlanta – participated in the count. Once analyzed, the results should provide a needed benchmark for the state's native pollinator population. Future censuses will help track the health of Georgia pollinators.

Pollinators, both domestic and wild, contribute about $367 million to the Georgia economy each year, according to a 2015 study by UGA economists.

Griffin modeled the program on the Great Backyard Bird Count, a citizen science program run by Cornell University that asks people to count the birds they see in their backyard on a given winter day. Hopefully, the Great Georgia Pollinator Census will become an annual tradition for families and gardening groups, much like the backyard bird count.

In addition to the data generated by the census, Griffin wanted the count to serve as an educational experience for Georgians. After spending 15 minutes focused on one plant to count pollinators, many participants reported having a new respect for their backyard or garden ecosystems, Griffin said.

In addition to hundreds of adult volunteers, thousands of school children participated in the count. At Colham Ferry Elementary School in Watkinsville, STEM teacher Diane Parr's students practiced for two weeks leading up to the count. When the day came, they were excited to make history, but they ended up wowed by what they witnessed in the garden.

"The pollinator count opened the eyes of my students to the importance of every living thing on Earth, including the tiniest insects," Parr said.

While it was hard to stay still and count for 15 minutes, each student came away with a new appreciation of the tiny world that exists on the plants in the school garden, Parr added.

"The educational part of this project is just as important as the data," said Kris Braman, professor and head of the Department of Entomology at the UGA College of Agricultural and Environmental Sciences, after finishing her on-campus count. "It's a wonderful chance for people to learn more about the pollinators in their yards, what's really happening to them, and how they can support them."

Griffin plans to publish insights from the census on the Great Georgia Pollinator Census website (www.ggapc.org) as well as in traditional academic journals. To keep up with the latest news from the census, join the Great Georgia Pollinator Census Group on Facebook.

SUNBELT AG EXPO: Research is proven here before it is released to farmers

important the event is for them.

“It’s so close to home and it is such a presence in the Southeast that it’s usually a big turn-out for us,” she said. “It’s a big deal for us.”

Other companies will show new lines of equipment during the Expo. Kubota and Massey Ferguson, for example, will display new models of their tractor lines. Kubota will introduce its M8 series tractor with over 200 horsepower, which represents the company’s entry into the large utility tractor market. Massey Ferguson will introduce its Dyan-4 Semi-Powershift transmission into the company’s 5700 Global Series, which provides a premium transmission in its mid-spec, heavy-duty utility tractors.

The Expo also will offer exhibitors providing various services to farmers and those in the agriculture fields. Rebecca Brightwell, co-director of the FarmAgain Project through the University of Georgia Extension Service, said the Sunbelt Expo is a great opportunity to reach farmers.

“The Sunbelt Expo is the highlight of our year,” Brightwell said in an email. “Nowhere else could we get to meet and interact with so many great farm families. We get to hear their stories and share the work that we do.”

FarmAgain is a free service that focuses on promoting independence for farmers and producers who have disabilities or chronic health conditions. For example, one of FarmAgain’s programs is AgrAbility, which helps farmers find solutions to tasks they may have difficulty doing. The solution may be as simple as adding an extended step on a tractor for someone with bad knees.

“We are able to show farmers in-person solutions if they are experiencing injuries or health conditions that make farming difficult,” Brightwell said. “In our tent at the Sunbelt Expo we have brought together a variety of vendors that display equipment that can make farming tasks easier. So, farmers get to see the equipment and worksite adaptation ideas first hand and ask questions.”

The Expo also provides the opportunity to show the latest results from the year-round research efforts done there. Blalock said the Expo works with academic and corporate agronomic researchers to come up with best practices in cotton, peanut, soybean, bermudagrass and alfalfa.

“We are not merely planting crops to harvest, but we are gaining useful data along the way,” he said.

“We work to come up with the best seed varieties, crop protection, soil fertility, precision ag, irrigation management, all aimed at enhancing our farmers’ economic and environmental sustainability so they can continue to produce the safest, most abundant, most economical supply food, fiber and shelter in the world,” Blalock added.

The Sunbelt Ag Expo is in its 42nd year and will be at Spence Field in Moultrie. For more information, call 229.985.1968 or go online to www.sunbeltexpo.com.

Jim Anderson, a large animal veterinarian and owner of Farm Goods MS based in Carthage, Miss., demonstrates a calf-catcher to a disabled farmer at Sunbelt Ag Expo in October 2018. The calf catcher attaches to most ATVs and UTVs and allows a single operator to safely capture, process and move newborn calves.

DOCUMENTING: Book will educate and inform readers for generations

David Gazda, owner of an Angus genetics farm in Athens who is serving as finance chair for the history book project, said the book’s message will live on years past its projected April 2021 release date.

“This is not only documenting the industry here in the state for the last 250 years but we’ve got something that can be a great educational tool for this generation and future generations,” Gazda said. “You hear all the time that 98 percent of our population is removed from the farm, removed from agriculture. They have no idea where their food comes from. They have no idea where their clothing comes from. They have no idea where their milk comes from.”

Gazda said the foundation is $50,000 into its $150,000 campaign drive. The book is on track for publication in October 2020. The foundation plans to release it in April 2021, the 60th anniversary of formation of the Georgia Cattlemen’s Association.

Callaway said that all of the money raised will fund production of the first edition of the book. He is hopeful that sales of the book will be brisk enough to fund scholarships and youth programs supported by the GCA in Georgia.

“It won’t go to support us old folks,” Callaway said. Because donations are being made to the cattlemen’s foundation, they are tax-deductible.

In addition to donations, the foundation is also seeking historical photos and family stories.

“These photos we need are stuck away in drawers and boxes and closets and family albums across the state,” Callaway said.

He stressed that the book is not intended to serve as a history of the Georgia Cattlemen’s Association. There are some 15,000 cattlemen in the state, Gazda said, not all of them members of the association. Their stories are important, as are those of families with a past in the industry whether active now or not.

If you have a story or a piece of history that you wish to be considered for inclusion in Georgia’s cattle history book, or if you have questions regarding the book, please contact Michele Creamer, vice president of operations for the Georgia Cattlemen’s Association, at 478.474.6560 or michele@gabeef.org.
